SAMUEL HARVEY TAYLOR.

On the eighteenth day of January, 1755, "the Trustees of the Presbyterian Church and Congregation of the city of New York," passed a vote, inviting "the Reverend Mr. MacGregor, Presbyterian minister of Nutfield, alias Londonderry, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England," to "take upon him the ministerial charge of this church and congregation." They offered him a salary of "two hundred pounds per annum and the further sum of thirty pounds per annum for house rent." They also "further agreed that this church and congregation be at the full charge of his removal from the place of his present residence and habitation, to be paid on his arrival here, to the amount of any sum not exceeding fifty pounds."

At this meeting of the Trustees, Rev. Aaron Burr, President of the College of New Jersey, presided, by appointment of the Presbytery of New York. "On the Lord's day, being the 19th January, 1755, after evening service, the heads of families being desired to stay, affirmed the call 'nemine contradicente,' as also the act of the Trustees, relating to Mr. MacGregor's salary and house rent, and the expense of his removal to New York, the Rev. Mr. Burr presiding; and within two or three days, the number of the names subscribed to the call appeared to be one hundred and fifty-six."

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1872, by SAMUEL BURNHAM, for the Proprietors, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

SECOND SERIES.—VOL. IV. NO. I.

This flattering invitation was given by what has since been named the Wall Street, and now the First Presbyterian Church in New York City. Mr. MacGregor was deeply affected by this "unanimous call from an honorable and wealthy society in the metropolis of one of the most considerable of the British Colonies." He felt the inducement to live in a place "where a minister may be in a much better capacity to purchase books and have more leisure to study them" than could be found at Londonderry; for in this place "the temporal support allowed is not one third part of what is proposed in the other place"; yet he says: "When I consider that Londonderry is a place of great importance to the interest of religion, particularly to that of the Presbyterian persuasion in New England; perhaps of as great as New York is to the same interest in that and the more southern Colonies; that Presbytery is comparatively weak in New England to what it is in New York, and so is less able to provide for important vacancies to their satisfaction; that there is something in the peculiar circumstances of my congregation which renders it quite improbable that they would continue united in case I should leave them; that besides the general relation I stand in to the church of God as a minister, I am under a special tie to the congregation in Londonderry, and so am more particularly bound to see to and promote the interest of religion among them; these are some of the considerations which have turned the balance with me in favor of Londonderry, so that I think it my duty to return the call of New York."

The township which the New York trustees called Nutfield has discontinued its rivalry with the commercial emporium; still it receives fresh honor from the genius and the disinterested piety of its early pastors. The incident just narrated is only one among many occurrences, attesting the power of a self-denying clergyman to shape the character of a people. For more than a hundred years the ancient township of Londonderry has felt the influence of its first pastor, Rev. James MacGregor, and also of his son, Rev. David MacGregor, who could not be moved from his pastorate by the solicitations of President Aaron Burr. From that township a hundred young men have gone through the college into professional life, many of them into stations of eminent usefulness.

One of these men was Samuel Harvey Taylor. His favorite subject of thought was the perpetuity of influence, the long-continued power of a good or a great act. He loved to reflect on the good which he had received from the life of James and David MacGregor, from the Andersons, Livermores, McKeens, Bells, and Pinkertons, who were the founders of Londonderry, New Hampshire, and moulded the character of the town. He was born in that part of the town now called Derry, on the third of October, 1807. His father, Captain James Taylor, was for a long time a deacon of the church in Derry, as the subject of this notice was a deacon of the Seminary Church in Andover. At the age of eight years, Samuel Harvey was called to bear certain responsibilities which are not ordinarily borne by persons under the age of twelve. When fourteen years old, he took the chief care of two large farms in his native town. Such facts as these betray the secret of his subsequent career. They illustrate the words of one of his favorite poets: "Adeo in teneris consuescere multum est." He early learned the art of government. At the age of eighteen he was thrown from a wagon, and received such a physical injury as inclined him to pursue a literary life. "Here I began my education," he was accustomed to say, when in his later years he passed the spot at which he turned from the farm to the school. He entered Pinkerton Academy, an institution which has long adorned his native town, and after two years of academic study he became a member of the sophomore class in Dartmouth College. There is a peculiar interest in noticing the impression which a teacher, after the lapse of a score or two of years, retains of his former pupils. If the pupils were faithful, he forgets every imperfection which he once observed in them; if they were unfaithful, he remembers their crudities. Dr. Calvin E. Stowe writes:—

"While I was professor of the Greek and Latin languages and literature in Dartmouth College, now forty years ago, S. H. Taylor was a student in the college, and specially interested in the classical department. He had the same traits of character then which have distinguished him through life. He was twenty-three years old (if I remember rightly), with remarkable maturity, completeness, and symmetry of mind, a moral nature of unsullied purity, a silent, quiet, unobtrusive, but irresistible force of character. He was kind-hearted, benevolent, religious, and unfailingly true to all his obligations of every kind, as the needle to the pole. He was a friend, always reliable, never failing, never shrinking, never even quavering (though the needle itself will sometimes quiver on its pivot), industrious, indefatigable, always with one object, and only one, before his mind, and that, to do his whole duty, cheerfully and thoroughly, in every position in which he was placed.”¹

While a member of Dartmouth College, Mr. Taylor began his religious life. Designing to become the pastor of a church at home, or a missionary to the heathen, he entered the Theological Seminary at Andover in the autumn of 1832. While pursuing his theological studies, he consented to become an assistant teacher of Phillips Academy. During the year 1834-5 he acquired a high reputation in this office. He spent the year 1836-7 as a tutor in Dartmouth College. He received his diploma at Andover, in 1837, and in the autumn of that year became the Principal of Phillips Academy.

The manuscripts which he wrote while a student and instructor at Hanover and Andover, abound with expressions like the following:—

“I have mourned over the bad habits of study which I have contracted, and feel the great importance of correcting these, if possible. It is a difficult task to correct errors of mind or of conduct. Nothing but a fixed and persevering determination will ever insure success. But reform here, like reform in other things, must be undertaken with a determination to effect something: there is a sacred obligation resting upon us to make as much of ourselves as possible. Our duty is never done till we do all that was in our power to do. There are few that come up to this high point. I pray that this may be my aim; then whether I do little or much, I shall have done my duty.”—“Although I am engaged in the study of theology, I steal a few hours each day to devote to heathen authors. I take great pleasure in the study of the Latin and Greek. I do not, however, study them simply for the pleasure they afford. I think that a positive advantage is to be derived from the perusal of such models of excellence as are to be found among the ancient classical writers. When I think that such men as Cudworth, Leighton, John Howe, and Robert Hall drank deeply at these fountains, and owed much of their distinction and usefulness to this circumstance, I must believe that there is something in the literary dust of antiquity worth gathering up.”—“If there is anything pure in a world where sin has left on every spot traces of its own deformity, it is that pleasure which fills the very soul, when we reflect that our exertions have been the means of relieving the distress, supplying the wants, or of improving in any manner the condition of any one of the human family. How strong a motive to holy action! How admirably is the wisdom of Deity here displayed! Happiness is made to depend upon virtuous action. The greater the benefits conferred upon others, the greater the amount of our own enjoyment. On this principle alone, if we consulted our own interests, we would constantly seek opportunities of doing good. We would impart, if for no purer motive, at least for the sake of receiving as much again."—"My hours of recitation [during the Dartmouth tutorship] are by far the pleasantest of the day. I love to watch the operations of mind as exhibited by different individuals. I require some one of the class to present, at each recitation, a translation of what had been read a few days before. When this is read, all in the class are allowed to criticise it. They think they have done no justice to the author till they have made him speak in great swelling words. With these I feel bound to wage war. What the author expresses in a single word they think is much more forcible when drawn out into twenty. One of my pupils translated a Greek sentence, thus: 'The arrows of the god continued to do their execution throughout the camp for nine days.' This translation is perfect as far as words are concerned, but who does not feel that it falls far below the simplicity of the original? 'Nine days throughout the camp his arrows flew.'—"I met with a beautiful letter from Caius Pliny to his friend Fabius: 'Formerly you wrote me no letters. You say you have nothing to write. But write this, that you have nothing to write; or only this, as the ancients are wont to begin their letters: If you are well I rejoice; I am well also. This is sufficient for me.' How much heart in this! Who would ever question the sincerity of one who wrote in a style like this? Any one who knows aught that is in man knows that such expressions cannot be forged."—"I spend no hour of the Sabbath [at Andover] more pleasantly than the one which is spent in the Sabbath school. And I have taken as much pleasure in preparing for such an exercise as for any in which I have ever engaged. How very desirable it is that we should be able to present truth in a clear and forcible manner, so that it may not only be understood, but felt. There is something truly noble in imparting moral instruction. It is directly calculated to elevate the mind of both teacher and pupil."

Many passages like the preceding, written before Dr. Taylor intended to spend his life as an educator of youth, foreshadow the principles which animated him throughout that life. His paramount aim in all his educational efforts was to promote the religious welfare of the community. He believed that, as a complete education must be a Christian one, it is advisable to put our higher schools under the control of Christian men. These schools must be sustained either by their respective alumni, or by the State, or by men who feel the impulse of the same religious sentiment. It is very seldom that the alumni of a school are numerous or affluent enough to support it. If a school be under the patronage of the State, it will not be distinctively religious, and will be subject to the fluctuations of political parties. If it be under the control of Christians, who feel the stimulus of the same faith working by love, it will be more apt to receive that generous endowment, without which it will be incapable of imparting a generous culture. It cannot rely on the religious sentiment of the community without the aid of a general love of learning, nor on that love of learning without the aid of the religious feeling ; it must rely on a union of the two. Such being the conviction of Dr. Taylor, he labored for the Christian academy as well as the Christian college, and for such a discipline as makes the religious culture paramount to the intellectual.

While he believed that if a single religious denomination be large enough to sustain its own higher schools, it ought to sustain them, and give them such an impetus as comes only from a unity of interest and counsels, he also maintained that a denominational school should not be sectarian. Perhaps in his own academy he never made a denominational remark which would injure the sensibilities of a Calvinist or Lutheran, Baptist, Methodist, or Episcopalian. In his early life he was a Presbyterian, in his later life a Congregationalist ; but his pupils never knew that he preferred one of these denominations to the other. His theological opinions were those of his two instructors, Dr. Leonard Woods and Dr. Bennet Tyler ; but he probably never indicated to his pupils that he favored the Old School more than the New. His great aim was to instil into the minds of his scholars those principles in which all Evangelical sects agree ; and although he deemed it wise to carry a school upward by the impulse of a religious denomination, he deemed it unwise to push it forward by the zeal of sectarians.

Next to the Christian nurture of young men, their classical education lay nearest the heart of Dr. Taylor. In 1843 he published a "Guide for Writing Latin," translated from the German of John Philip Krebs. "In connection with Professor B. B. Edwards, of Andover, he published in 1844 a 'Grammar of the Greek Language,' for the use of high schools and colleges, translated from the German of Dr. Raphael Kühner. In 1846 he published an 'Elementary Greek Grammar,' compiled from a work of Dr. Kühner. Of this grammar twenty editions have been printed, and he was preparing an entirely new edition of it at the time of his death." "In 1861 he published a volume which illustrates his own method of teaching, and is entitled, 'Method of Classical Study; illustrated by Questions on a few Selections from Latin and Greek Authors.'" "In 1870 appeared his last finished volume, entitled, 'Classical Study; its value, illustrated by Extracts from the Writings of Eminent Scholars,' with an Introduction by himself."¹

It was not, however, by the publication of books that he promoted most effectually the cause of classical learning; it was by his skill and enthusiasm in his recitation-room. He made the very number of that room a classical phrase. Thousands of his pupils will never forget "Number Nine." Their parents and children, who never have seen and never will see, have yet heard of "Number Nine." The "Overland Monthly," a periodical published in San Francisco, California, has devoted fourteen columns to a criticism on his course as an instructor.² The author of the criticism unequivocally shows himself to be no friend of Dr. Taylor, and no friend of what the Andover statutes call a "consistent Calvinism." His testimony, therefore, will not be regarded as the result of personal attachment. He writes:—

"Not until our last year before graduation did we come under him as our instructor. It was then that we found him to be the greatest of living teachers. Our race with him over the course of classic lore was not a lengthy [lengthened] one. Yet I can remember how we sat for an hour and three quarters, many a time, and dwelt with real interest and entertainment, during all that time, over five lines of the 'Æneid,' or over two lines of the 'Iliad.' . . . He taught Latin and Greek, it seemed to me, as no one had ever taught it before, or ever would again. How intent and earnest was he, as he took up the first line of Homer, with all the freshness and curiosity of a new seeker for light, as if he had not gone wearisomely over and over it again, now for the thousandth time. How lovingly he took it up, syllable by syllable, and word by word, tending each word as carefully as a sweet babe, turning it one side and another, with evident affection, warning us of the curious beauty of its interpretation, the fine philosophy of its derivation, the wise peculiarity of its composition, its singular increment, its unique terminal ending, its quaint and apt office in its place, and the happy burden of its meaning. How fondly did he dwell upon the significance of the aorist, the felicitous adaptation of the infinitive, the peculiar force of the $\kappa\alpha\iota\gamma\acute{a}\rho$, the exuberant opulence of verbs in $\mu\acute{a}$! How affectionately did he watch the gayly dancing feet, the sweet whirling waltz, of spondee and dactyl, day after day, in numbered cotillions of hexameter verse! Shame upon us for dreaming he cared for no one, when we saw him daily in sweet and tender alliance with those heroes of elder days, and heard him never so happy of phrase as when he was in the society of pious \mathcal{A} eneas, the aged Anchises, old Fidus Achates, the swift-footed Achilles, the matchless Agamemnon, or the wandering Ulysses! What vivid interest did he display in delving amid the undeveloped mines of Virgil's and Homer's lore! How he excited us, who were over-dull, to a curiosity for searching there for what unknown wealth! With what a fine alchemy did he weave the gold of interest and pleasure into those hard, cold lines of languages, dead and as yet untranslated! We studied more and harder then than ever before. We stole hours from our hitherto [indulged] listlessness; we cheated our 'old sledge' and 'euchre' of many a happy hour, that we might appear unabashed before him, and show him that we, too, might perhaps some day be able to know of epic heroes, more immortal than dead saints. Verily, although we owe him no debt of love, we do owe him a debt of gratitude, for revealing to us our own strength, and awakening in us unsuspected curiosity, and love of learning, and unknown capabilities."

As a prominent aim of Dr. Taylor was to promote a Christian and a classical education, so it was his characteristic endeavor to make all education thorough. It is a mistake to imagine that he confined himself to a mere grammatical drill; to the memory of the minutiae of language; to mechanical processes which he knew to be useful when subordinate, although belittling when prominent. In one of his unpublished lectures he adopts as his own the following words of an instructor in one of our colleges:—

"I have thought that one reason why the study of the classical languages has not been more attractive to our college students is, that the knowledge of antiquity has not been poured in to render Athens and Rome living realities to them. Let the science and philosophy of ancient days, the lost arts of the antique world, be made to illustrate their studies, so often imagined to be at variance with, or, at least, to have no common interest in, the past ; let them, as they study their mathematics, have a lecture or two from their classical instructor, and find entertainment, at least, in learning how the quadrature of the circle could employ a prisoner's hours as far back as Pericles ; how conic sections and the doctrine of geometric analysis date back nearly as far as Plato ; let their study in mechanics be introduced by an account of the ancient knowledge in this department ; let them hear that hydraulic engines, wind and water mills are no modern inventions ; above all, let their instruction in government be illustrated by the history, and forms, and philosophy of ascendant and declining Greece, and of the later Roman commonwealth and early empire ; let their study of natural and revealed religion be accompanied by lectures as reverent and suggestive as Mr. Gladstone's 'On the Place of Ancient Greece in the Providential Order of the World,' and there will be no danger that classical studies so pursued will seem useless to any one."

Faithful to his motto, Qualitas non quantitas, Dr. Taylor adopted the exhaustive method of teaching. He deemed it better to understand a few books well, than many books ill. He says :—

" The feeling is widely prevalent that the mere reading of so many pages of Latin and Greek is the chief thing to be done, while all that gives the best discipline and cultivates the taste, peculiarities in construction or modes of expression, are looked upon as of minor importance. This sacrifices some of the most valuable elements of the study ; it overlooks the roots of the two languages which are the 'footprints of the nations,' and which photograph indelibly their habits, views, and conceptions ; it overlooks the nicer distinctions in the meaning of words, the difference of thought and representation as indicated by different cases, moods, tenses, as well as by all the other more delicate machinery of language, which are designed to mark with delicate precision the picture or view just as it lay in the mind of the author."

Believing, as he did, that a student should exhaust the riches of a single paragraph rather than touch lightly the wealth of a lengthened treatise, Dr. Taylor was dissatisfied with the prevailing system of academical study. He thought that the colleges required too extensive reading of the classics as a condition for admittance to the freshman class. He writes :—

" In itself considered, the amount is not greater than is desirable. But in view of the time usually devoted to the preparatory course, it is much greater than can be properly prepared. As the preparatory course is the first effort in the critical study of language, and is to lay the foundation on which the succeeding superstructure is to be erected, anything which prevents the formation of right habits of study, gives a wrong bias, or interferes with the thoroughness of the work, may prove fatal to the whole. When it is borne in mind how much is implied in the present requirements for college, how many subjects for study are embraced, it will be readily seen that more work is involved than can be properly done in the time generally allotted to it. It is not the mere going over the ground that secures the end sought. Haste, here, emphatically makes waste. It is the last place to try a system of cramming. There must be time to investigate and make the way luminous at every step; to reason and compare, to adjust delicate questions, to discriminate between apparently similar words, modes of expression and construction, and to get clear and well-defined ideas, or there is little real progress or profit. Many a student, driven over ground hurriedly, because so much is a necessary prerequisite for college, with no time to take in the spirit and beauties of what he is studying, without strengthening his memory, quickening his perceptions, refining his tastes, or invigorating his reasoning powers, loses all interest in the study, charges his failure to the classics, while it belongs only to the confused and ill-directed manner of studying them. I do not hesitate to say that, if the time usually devoted to the preparatory course of classical study were wisely given to very much less than the amount required, the benefit to the student in his future studies, and its influence on his future success and usefulness, would be vastly greater than it is as the study is at present conducted. I am also confident that this slow and thorough method at the outset, mastering all forms, the laws which determine them, as well as what they express, reviewing and re-reviewing and reviewing again, making the portions studied as familiar as if in our own language, till every scene described becomes a reality, and the student an actor in it, — that such a method will keep up an unabated interest in the study through the preparatory and collegiate course, and in the end will enable the student to go over vastly more ground with greater pleasure and profit than according to the present system."

In striving to promote, on Christian principles, a thorough classical education, Dr. Taylor placed a high estimate on the academy. In more than one of his manuscripts he quotes the remark of a college professor: "I do not hesitate to utter my deliberate and matured conviction, that more importance should be attached to the preparatory than to the collegiate course of study. I mean, that the destiny of the student, and of the world through him, is more affected by the preparatory course. A failure in this is wont to be so fatal, so irretrievable, that no pains should be spared to avoid it." One secret of Dr. Taylor's success as an instructor lay in the fact that he was the right man in the right place; he had an enthusiasm in the work of teaching, in the work of teaching the classics, in the work of teaching an academy. He loved to lay foundations. He labored in his school not because it was his, but because it might be a powerful auxiliary to the college. While he toiled for young men in the initial stages of their classical education, he regarded himself as toiling for the universities of the land. Hence, he said much and wrote much on the connection between the academy and the college. If men are rightly trained in the academy, they will elevate the character of the university ; and if the university insist on a large and rich scholarship, it will elevate the character of the preparatory school. He insisted that in our colleges the competition should be, not for the largest number of pupils, but for those pupils who are most thoroughly prepared ; that our colleges should not admit all who apply, but those only who are fitted for admission. In his own peculiar style he said : " The student in the academy must be aware that the college standard is high, and that he must come fully up to it, or be sent back to the academy in a kind of disgrace. The knowledge of this elevated standard, and of the fact that he will be excluded from college unless he reach the lofty ideal, has a quickening influence upon the boy. It relieves him from his inability to study by lamplight ; has a salutary influence upon his weak eyes ; mitigates his headache and toothache ; cures the sprained ankle which prevents his going up to the recitation-room ; and is better than several boxes of pills for the dyspepsia. It is like an electric shock to a palsied limb." Dr. Taylor was wont to quote from one of our college professors, the remark : " We complain of our preparatory schools that they fail to do their work well and to do enough of it. Shame be on us for such a complaint. As long as their students are admitted to college with imperfect preparation, they will be obliged, in spite of their objections, to yield. If the door is left freely open, of course it will be freely entered. The academy of right should complain of colleges for wresting its work from its hands before it has had time to finish it."

In the preceding remarks we see that Dr. Taylor's ideal of education was a high one. His familiar saying was : " Education is not so much knowledge, as a preparation for knowledge." It is the formation of the mental habits ; it is the discipline of the moral feelings ; it is the acquisition of intellectual and moral power. It ought to be superintended by men who know the avenues to the human mind and heart ; men who combine with a quick insight of the human character, an earnest desire to form that character aright. Hence, he regarded it as a great evil that so much of the instruction given in our colleges is given by young men who are not themselves thoroughly disciplined, and who connect with the business of giving instruction in one department the business of receiving instruction in another ; the labors of a pupil in a law or theological school with the labors of a teacher in the classical or mathematical school. He mourned over the fact that so many subordinate teachers in the academy were not well furnished for their work ; and he deemed it important that there should be a seminary for the training of classical instructors. He has sometimes been thought whimsical in the high estimate which he put on regularity of habit ; the duty of observing stated hours for rising to work and retiring to rest, for repasts and study. It was not merely for his students, during their novitiate, that he insisted on the regular study hours ; but he reasoned thus : Unless a scholar observe these hours in the academy, he will not in the college ; and unless he observe them in the college, he will not in the professional school ; and unless he observe them in the professional school, he will not in his professional life ; he will never be a student. He was wont to say, that in a majority of instances, a boy who remained irregular in Phillips Academy, continued remiss and vagrant through his entire subsequent course ; and those who reformed their habits in later years confessed their error in not forming them well at the academy. In disciplining the boy, he was looking forward to the man. Few teachers have been so provident as he for the future of their pupils.

It has sometimes been asked why he rushed forward with so great celerity in his recitations, plying his scholars with rapid questions, and demanding rapid answers. He desired to cultivate the habit of concentrating the attention on one object. His pupils, during their study hours, must give themselves wholly to their work ; must prepare themselves for a ready solution of all difficulties ; must foresee the questions and forecast the answers, familiarizing themselves with different forms of statement, and guarding their minds against the possibility of confusion. Therefore, if a pupil while in the recitation-room did not pay constant heed to the business before him, the question would fall suddenly on his ear, and not being answered at once would fly to another. If unprepared, he had no time then to deliberate or repent ; he must speak, or a more attentive pupil would speak for him. Thus he became alert and energetic. Many a lawyer, while examining witnesses before a jury, has thanked the master of "Number Nine" for giving him a grapnel by which he could hold firm and fast the materials then and there to be examined.

As the aim of Dr. Taylor was to discipline the mind, to sharpen the faculties, to cultivate the power of logical and independent thought, of exact, precise, neat expression, he made his recitation-room an intellectual gymnasium. It is interesting to read the reminiscences which his pupils have written of the scenes in that room. The following is a summary of them as given by different individuals :—

The Principal enters "Number Nine." He summons Munroe to read the first sentence. Munroe makes a gross mistake in pronunciation. "Sufficient; next, Smith," resounds the voice of the principal. But Smith had been inattentive; and being surprised, hesitates in finding the place. "Next, Brown," comes the imperative word. Brown translates the first line, and then follow the interrogatories in quick succession, and the answers must spring forth as rapidly as the questions. "Dicam?" says the principal. "It is" (begins the pupil—but he is suddenly arrested by the exclamation : "It is—that is superfluous : say where it is made").—"Indicative mood, future tense, active voice, first person of dico, dicere, dixi, dictum." While question and reply, like a weaver's shuttle, are passing swiftly between teacher and pupil, the vigilant eye detects a student, who, instead of attending to the lesson, is arranging himself for a half-recumbent position on the settee : "Pause here," cries the heavy voice of the teacher ; "Robinson, when you have adjusted yourself properly, we will proceed. Next, Jones." This man is thoroughly at home ; answers rapidly all the questions suggested by the lesson, relating to grammar, history, biography, geography, mythology, logic, rhetoric, poetry, oratory, political economy, morals, religion, etc., etc. "Next, Wilson." This man is indefinite ; gives vague answers, half right and half wrong. "Have you studied the lesson, sir?" "No, sir, I was bothered."—"Bothered is no word for a student, sir," replies the principal, before the vacillating student has time to finish the sentence. "Next, White;," and now comes a recitation peculiar to Phillips Academy, and superior to any which I ever heard in any college or professional school.¹

The recitation is in Sallust. Magnificus? is the single word, uttered in an interrogative tone by the Doctor, who neither uses nor tolerates a superfluous syllable. The student quickly translates it by the English "magnificent." "Next." The second translates it, "great." "Next." The third replies, "splendid." "Next." The fourth answers, "haughty." The fifth and sixth are equally unsuccessful in selecting the precise term; and at length, despairing of the right answer, the exact principal utters in the most emphatic tone, suiting the action to the word, and the class will never forget the word, "IM—POS—ING."

"I remember," says Professor Carter, of Williams College, who also alludes to the incident named above, "once, where one of us translated maxima natu, the oldest, he said in his own way: 'I once asked a lady the age of her oldest daughter. She replied: my eldest daughter is fifteen years of age.' He could not have impressed the difference on us more strikingly. His own language was exact and correct. Once, however, he did use the word guess in the recitation-room. He had asked the reciter a question, and the reply had begun with 'I guess.' 'I guess' came out naturally enough as the introduction to his rejoinder, which was to set the blunderer right. It was a slip of absent-mindedness, and before he had finished his reply he saw it. Looking up with a smile, he said, 'I think. We cannot have any guessing here.'"

Mr. John Albee writes, in the "Boston Daily Advertiser": "The intercourse of Dr. Taylor with his class for two or three hours each day was always a stern, unflinching, hard-fought field, in which, though many suffered, many, too, felt the germination of resolutions and purposes which have never forsaken them. Chief of these, perhaps, may be reckoned the determination to do everything thoroughly: if to plant a tree, to put it down firm and straight; if to do professional work, to make each effort complete, careful, and vigilant. Under this powerful discipline of his, it is true the weak sank down at once; the mediocre struggled bravely awhile; the few maintained the unequal fight until, like the Indian's slaughtered foe, his strength passed into theirs. If you carried any trophies away, you were sure of the applause of the class; but his approbation could only be guessed at. He did not deal in praise and flattery. I think he would have had some suggestions and some counsel to give even to his favorite Cicero and beloved Homer; and it does not seem to me possible that any Greek author whatever could have come unscathed from one of his examinations on the Greek particle. I have known him keep a scholar on his feet half an hour on a few lines of Homer, with such a running fire of questions as seemed impossible to stand under, and when the whole class scarcely breathed for fear of a single mistake of their champion. If he went through, we all felt joy, and shared the honor; as Ajax's shield covered not only himself but his friends, so his performance saved that day from disaster for all of us.

"The moral effect of all this was astonishing. No doubt, however, it strengthened the strong, and overwhelmed the dunces. But for what purpose are dunces sent to school, if not to find out that they are dunces? Well is it, if they thus early learn to entertain no fruitless hopes. There was a good deal of that material at Andover, which, because it proposed to enter the ministry, thought itself entitled to be treated tenderly, and counting education not the chief thing, made it not even secondary. For such, Dr. Taylor had no mercy, and he did his part towards preventing the divorce of religion and sound learning, both in his school and in many other fields.

"He was a natural leader; he would have made an admirable soldier or president, where there was anything to be done. But he was content to make ladders for others to climb; to fit the characters that came under his hand, for stations higher than his own, but not more noble nor less worthy of admiration and respect. The greatest of his scholars would turn with instinctive deference to him as to a rightful master."

"Every member of my class," writes Mr. William A. Mowry, teacher of the Providence High School, "stood amazed and appalled at the flood of questions which were brought forth to elucidate the first line of Homer's Iliad. In Dr. Taylor's 'Method of Classical Study' are more than forty questions upon that line; but I believe that he put more than two hundred to my class in relation to it. One day our recitation commenced with a review of the declension of the compound pronoun ὅστις ἥπτις ὅτι. We ought to have learned the lesson well, as we were to recite it for the second time; but we blundered; there was no excuse for us, and we were sent summarily from the recitation-room, with the injunction to prepare ourselves before attempting to recite again. We did so, and never afterwards did we need such a reprimand."

Did not the expeditious and energetic discipline which is described in the foregoing paragraphs discourage some worthy scholars who were slow and timid? Sometimes, probably; but one of Dr. Taylor's pupils¹ has met the inquiry with the following reply:—

"After all that has been said about the late Principal of Phillips Academy, I think that his most remarkable characteristic was his patience with dull scholars who were desirous of improving themselves. He was ready to do anything for any boy who was willing to do anything for himself. I doubt whether he possessed naturally and originally a rapid mind. I think that his celerity was an attainment. I imagine that a certain slowness of acquisition in his earlier years gave him a great sympathy with any slowness of his pupils. He had himself been through the process of severe effort, in which he asked the pupil to follow him. Bright minds with no principle of application he treated severely, but was very tender to those who were dull yet faithful. He had no charity for wasted talent, but really loved those who desired to make a good use of what talent they had. This was apparent, not only in his instructions but also in his discipline. He showed respect only to the good intention. He prized the plainest minds in his school if they were accompanied by an orderly and reliable character. Sometimes, but not often, his ardent love of the right intention proved to be his blind side. He would occasionally forgive the blackest record of a boy who promised well. The restoration of character was to him so great an object that to effect it he would compromise everything. I remember once that an individual, after having been proved guilty of a criminal offence, so wrought upon Dr. Taylor's feelings by his protestations of penitence that he was allowed to remain in the Academy. I thought at the time that the procedure injured the morale of the school, especially as other boys who remained proud and obdurate were often dismissed for much lighter offences. I would not say that he was partial; for to be partial is to act without a good reason; but I would say that he would pardon a poor boy who was, on the whole, struggling to do well, when he would punish a rich boy who did not care whether he did well or ill; and he would encourage obtuse scholars who made mistakes which they could not have avoided, when he would reprimand bright scholars who made mistakes which were the obvious result of carelessness."

It is evident from the preceding remarks, that Dr. Taylor made a deep impression on his pupils. This impression resulted from the unity of his character and life. The great majority of men have no distinctive character. They agree with others, repeat what others say, and neither think for themselves nor have any feeling of their own. Dr. Taylor had his own thoughts and his own emotions. He was his own man. There was a concinnity between his mind and his body. His person was commanding, and his voice sonorous. The letters of his pupils abound with expressions like these: "I remember the first time I ever saw him;" "I shall never forget my first impressions of him;" "I trembled when I was first introduced to him;" "It was no small thing to stand before his dread presence." His large and robust form, his heavy tread upon the floor, the deep tones in which he uttered his words of admonition, gave him a kind of power which a thin, spare man, with a tenor voice, would not have acquired. It is commonly said that the body is the handmaid of the soul: his body was his soul's executive officer. He was a man of clear convictions and of decided will; he therefore expressed his thoughts and feelings in clean-cut and definite words. One of his pupils says: "All vague, uncertain, visionary, and vacillating conditions of mind were far removed from him. As I write of him, I seem to feel that I must be precise, unflinching, bold, or I shall hear his voice as of old in the recitation-room saying right in the middle of an ugly sentence of Sallust, without a conjunction to cling to: 'You may sit down, sir; you don't understand it.'" With his sound sense he combined a quenchless enthusiasm in study. His prudence was not fossil wood, and his enthusiasm was not wildfire. His pupils trusted his judgment, and caught so much the more readily his interest in the classics. Like begets like; life produces life; fire kindles fire. A man's scholars are not made enthusiastic by authority nor by reasoning alone; they are sympathetic; they are enlivened by the life, are enkindled by the heat of their teacher. Many of Dr. Taylor's pupils inhaled the breath of his own inspiration. Scores of them have said, "I never knew how to study, until I went into 'Number Nine';" "He was the most exciting teacher whom I ever heard;" "I owe my power of application chiefly to him." One of them says, "It has been remarked of students in college who had been fitted at Andover, that they seemed often to go through the Latin and Greek of the freshman class from the sheer momentum imparted to them in the last year [Dr. Taylor's year] of the preparatory course."¹ He was a man of regular industry. Every morning at six o'clock he was at his study table; every evening before ten o'clock he had left his books in order to gain vigor from sleep for the toils of the next day. Hence, he had stored his mind with such an amount of knowledge, and accumulated such a degree of power, as astonished his pupils. One of them² has thus described the impression which he made by his acquisitions and mental force:—

"Sometimes we shrank from coming under his instruction, because we knew him to be so exact with himself that we could not put him off with any general or commonplace answers. His own mind was stored with such a variety of knowledge, and that knowledge was so constantly manifesting itself, that we sank back in self-abasement at the feebleness of our own efforts and the extent of our own ignorance.

"He may not have been a poet, but he had an exquisite appreciation of poetic images. We can never forget how animated he became over the pictures of pastoral life in Virgil's Bucolics and Georgics; how graphically he painted the scene in Virgil's Aeneid, where 'Hi summo in fluctu pendent; his unda dehiscens,' etc., etc., — 'These hang trembling upon the top of the wave; those are plunged into the trough of the sea,' etc.

"He never taught one thing alone. The knowledge of Latin and Greek words was but a small part of what he communicated to his pupils. It has often seemed to me that all the objections which are raised against the study of the classic languages in the abstract, were inapplicable to the study of them in the concrete under the guidance of Dr. Taylor.

"His memory appeared to me as remarkable as any of his other powers. A few months before his death, I visited the Academy and heard him conduct a recitation in Greek. During the recitation he saw a clergyman from Western Massachusetts entering the room. He arose and met the visitor, greeted him cordially and called him by name. Dr. Taylor told me afterwards that when he was an assistant of Mr. Johnson in 1835, he had that clergyman for a pupil; and had not seen him before that day during the last thirty-six years. — One of his scholars informed me that at an early age he entered the English department of the academy and remained in it only one term. On the day of his entering the academy he spoke to Dr. Taylor, but did not speak to him afterwards. Several years passed, and he came into the Classical department of the academy. While walking from the department to the dormitories he met Dr. Taylor, who recognized him at once and called him by name. These are but specimens of the accuracy with which he remembered the names and the history of his pupils."

The faults of Dr. Taylor were just such as would naturally result from his unity of character and life. Sometimes I have remonstrated with him against certain measures which he had adopted; but I found that he was led to adopt them by the high estimate which he placed on Phillips Academy. This exalted estimate came from his enthusiasm in his work, and this enthusiasm, although impelling him too far now and then, was yet one of his richest virtues. It has happened to me more than once to act as an intercessor for some young man who had been, as I supposed, too severely punished; but I found that the sternness of Dr. Taylor was an outgrowth from the very characteristics to which he owed his eminent success. As he had a vigorous constitution, an intrepid spirit, and an indomitable will, he was inclined to reprimand the boy who was irresolute and wavering in the discharge of duty. As he was regularly diligent, he had little patience with the idle. He was by nature inclined to social pleasure ; he was austere with himself, and sternly sacrificed his enjoyment to his duty ; he therefore was very far from flattering those who sacrificed their duty to their pleasures. Every day he studied the lesson of the day for his class ; "the used key is always bright,"—this was his maxim and one secret of his power;¹ it was natural, then, for him to feel personally wronged by those pupils who would not study their own lesson as much as he studied it for them. He had made himself ; he demanded of others to make themselves. He had a nice sense of propriety and dignity ; the Greek phrase, τὸ πεῖπον, was often on his lips ; hence, whatever he might have thought of wine-drinking and card-playing in a city parlor, he did not regard them as appropriate to the students on Andover Hill, and he sometimes rebuked these practices in words which were not thought to be well balanced. He had a pious regard for the anxieties of parents who committed their sons to his care, and who at the same time requested him to enforce a discipline which the parents confessed themselves unable to maintain. He was faithful to their commission ; he did what they urged him to do, and what his own conscience dictated. More than once he was reproached for adopting the identical regimen which fathers and mothers had advised, but for which they left him to bear the blame. More than once he became a kind of martyr to what he significantly called family government. Lamenting as he did the absence of authority in the household, he was exposed to the danger of exercising too much authority in the school. His energetic determination to do what he could in rightly moulding his own character, as well as that of his pupils, inclined him to an excess of severity rather than of laxness. If he was to fail at all, his failure would be in too little mildness rather than in too little sternness. He would have been more than human if, with all his rigid government over himself, he had not sometimes been unduly rigid with his scholars. They would have exercised more than ordinary candor if they did not suspect him, even when he was innocent, of too much austerity. One fact, however, is noteworthy: the persons who as boys complained most of his discipline were among the loudest in their expressions of gratitude to him when they became men. Another fact is memorable: the pupils who continued to criticise him as too severe were forward in advising their relatives to put themselves under his government. Many of his more recent scholars were the children of men whom he had disciplined. Another fact: the middle and junior classes of the academy, who knew him only as a disciplinarian, were more inclined to criticise him than were the members of the senior class, who knew him as an instructor. Still another fact: the men who were associated with him in the government of the academy had the fullest confidence in the general principles of his administration. Mr. Albert C. Perkins, the accomplished master of the high school in Lawrence, Massachusetts, has expressed, in the following words, the opinion of many who have been assistant teachers of Dr. Taylor:—

“Three years spent in Phillips Academy, while fitting for college, and two years subsequently spent there as a teacher, gave me opportunities to see how he worked; and I give some of the impressions wrought into my mind from daily contact with him during that time.

“He had no doubt that good behavior and sound scholarship should go together. He made frequent and earnest appeals to the honor and truthfulness, the manliness, and genuine courage of his pupils. If his appeals were unheeded, if any had set themselves to defy his authority or baffle his scrutiny, it was soon manifest that power was on the side of right, and that the academy had no nook where artifice could screen itself, or drones could live at ease. There is, in the minds of many, a totally mistaken idea that he was over-severe. If you were to judge of him in this respect from the hasty expressions of those who have been foiled in their attempts to overreach him, I doubt not you might find some ground for the idea to which I have referred. But I have been permitted to take counsel with him concerning some of the most aggravating offenders, who had openly insulted him, and there was never but one question in his mind: How shall something be made of this thoughtless boy? If he could startle into self-consciousness the folly of the wayward, or open by any means the blind eyes of the improvident, his end was gained. It was always with great reluctance, when private appeal and public admonition and careful warning had failed, that he sent transgressors away from his school; and he sought earnestly for some ground of hope that further trial might be successful. But he was no trifler; when it was clear to him that harm to the pupil was done by indulging him longer, and injury to the school by an evil example, his decision was prompt and speedily executed. He did not regard the academy as an asylum for vicious youth, and he was right. He had a keen insight into character, and the verdict he gave upon a boy who had been a few weeks in his school seldom needed to be revised. Dishonesty and cunning and ingenious artfulness wilted before him in an instant; the boy who went into his presence armed with a subterfuge, felt an eye upon him that searched him through, and soon learned that he could have no peace till he told the truth. I have never seen kinder consideration for the heedlessness of youth and weakness of inexperience than in him; it is enough to say that no one who went to school to make the highest attainments in learning, ever found anything but help and encouragement from the principal of Phillips Academy. He was a singularly modest man, but never timid. His duty might make him conspicuous, or it might take him to some obscure and hidden work known only to himself. It was all the same to him. His mind was far more intent on his work than on what others might think of it. It was for him to do; the admiration his work might gain was no affair of his. He was affable, and easily accessible. No one ever went to him with a perplexing doubt or heavy burden, but left him relieved and lightened. He made the way easy for honest diffidence, and reassured the faltering with his kind help.¹

There is another large class of facts helping us to answer the question whether the general discipline of Dr. Taylor was too austere: Hundreds of his pupils have been wont to express the deepest attachment to him. The tributes of reverence and love which they paid him at the time of his death were numerous and heartfelt. The alumni of Phillips Academy who were then members of Amherst College, united in saying: "To each of us Dr. Taylor has been more than an earnest and faithful instructor. A year's intercourse in the class-room has endeared him as a friend, whose affectionate interest in our welfare will cause his memory to be cherished more deeply as the years shall increase our gratitude" for his services in our behalf. The alumni who were then members of Yale College united in expressing "gratitude and affection" for their "dearly cherished and honored instructor," and said: "We mourn the loss of one who endeared himself to us all by his eminent virtues, unflinching integrity, and his true Christian example." From a parish in Iowa, an excellent pastor wrote: "At the annual examination of Phillips Academy, Dr. Taylor's face beamed with delight, as one after another of us rose, and, in our answers to his close questioning, did full credit to his instructions. I have had twenty-five teachers since that time, but none to whom I owe so much as to him. And now he is gone,— who will take his place in the hearts of his thousands of pupils?" From a distant town, the mother of one of his pupils wrote: "Was he not the teacher of my two sons, the youngest of whom has 'fallen on sleep'? Was he not also their father's teacher? Was not his name a household word with us,— a synonyme for all that was true and right and noble? At the instant when I first heard of his death, my uprising thought was: 'My darling son has met his teacher; they are together now; how glad my son will be to see him! How will the Phillips band that have passed the river rally around him!' Three weeks before the death of my son, he handed me his little Testament, and said, with feeling, 'Take good care of that. I read out of it every day, while at Andover, at morning prayers at school; and there are Dr. Taylor's notes and remarks on the margin, taken fresh from his lips.' Page after page of such testimonies might be cited, illustrating the reverence and love which hundreds of his scholars felt for him. The foregoing paragraphs indicate that the sentiments of other pupils were not so much those of affection as of admiration or respect or fear.

Although Dr. Taylor had a singular unity of character, yet he had some traits which were not ordinarily ascribed to him. He was fertile and ingenious in devising plans for doing good and averting evil. An incident which he has narrated in the Memoir of his father-in-law, is in exact keeping with many of his own contrivances. The Sabbath school at Derry was disturbed by persons who stood in the hall near the open door of the school-room. The superintendent of the school desired to avoid the annoyance of their loud conversation. Shall he shut the door? That might give offence to the parishioners who loved to stand in the hall. Some of them desired to hear what was said in the school while they did not choose to enter the school-room. The pastor said to the superintendent, "Can you not put a spring on the door which will always close it when it is opened?" Dr. Taylor adds: "To the unreflecting this might seem the merest trifling; but whoever understands the nature of the human mind, its nice susceptibilities, the slight causes which often give it a permanent direction for good or for evil, and that the destiny of individuals is sometimes so delicately poised that a feather's weight might turn the scale, will not regard it as an unimportant circumstance, whether that door were closed by conscious or unconscious agency. The spring was soon put upon the door" and the evil was removed.¹

When Dr. Taylor condescended to indulge his natural love of the ludicrous, he would narrate with real glee some ingenious stratagems of his pupils, some apt and pithy replies to questions which he had deemed unanswerable. He spoke of a retort as more playful than deceitful; or else he frowned at the motive while he smiled at the skill of the young master of sentences. When unbending his mind on a journey, he would describe many interviews like the following, which is narrated by Professor Carter:—

"The dread of his reprimand was so great that occasionally a student was very adroit, and, I suppose, very dishonest, in avoiding it. It was his custom after morning prayers, which he himself always conducted in the large room on the lower floor of the stone academy, to read off a list of delinquents, who were 'requested to remain.' After the reading of this list came the majestic bow that waved the rest of us to our recitations or to our rooms. One morning, among the rest, a certain student (who afterwards became famous as a duellist with the broadsword at Heidelberg) was invited to an interview, in which the following dialogue took place: 'Gibson, you were not in your room yesterday, when I called to see you.' This was a serious charge, and there was in the mind of the accused no excuse sufficient to account satisfactorily for the absence. But very coolly he asked: 'Mr. Taylor, would you please tell me whether it was in study hours that you called to see me?' 'Yes, sir,' was the brief answer. 'I never let any one come into my room in study hours, Mr. Taylor,' was the dignified and irreproachable answer of Gibson."

It must not be supposed that Dr. Taylor confined his attention to classical literature or to the routine of Phillips Academy. In 1851, he assisted in editing the History of Londonderry, and prefaced it with a memoir, in fifty-five pages, of Rev.

Edward L. Parker, who had written the history. In 1865, he published the Memorial of his brother-in-law, Joseph P. Fairbanks, of Saint Johnsbury, Vermont. From the year 1852, to the time of his death, he was an editor of the Bibliotheca Sacra. He corrected the proof-sheets of eighteen volumes of this Quarterly, and wrote various anonymous articles for it. For thirty-three years he was a member of the Board of Trustees of Andover Theological Seminary, and the clerk of the Board. For a long time he was also the librarian of the Seminary; a member of the Examining Committee of Harvard College; a member of the Oriental Society; a member and president of the Board of Trustees of Pinkerton Academy, and also of the Adams Female Seminary, in Derry, New Hampshire. He attended the meetings of various associations of teachers, and contributed to them valuable papers. He was active in promoting the interests of Andover, his adopted town, and of Derry, his native town. During a single year he would sometimes write eight or nine hundred letters. Many a widow repaired to him for counsel; many an orphan received from him both spiritual and material aid; he was an almoner to the poor, "and the cause which he knew not he searched out"; not seldom was he called to appraise the estate of a deceased friend; during the last thirty years he has superintended almost every funeral on Andover Hill. His many-sided acquisitions his love of nature and the fine arts, his natural or acquired celerity of action, are illustrated in the journal which he wrote of his foreign tour. He might have published an exciting volume on the scenes which he witnessed in Egypt, Palestine, Greece, Italy, France, Germany, Great Britain. He left New York on the 7th of March, 1856; in exactly one month after that day, he wrote to his home a familiar epistle on the top of the Pyramid of Ghizeh; and in six months after he had left his academy he was with his new treasures again in his recitation-room.¹

Thirty-five years ago, Dr. Taylor wrote: "I came here with the determination to do what I could. It will be little at most; but I trust that I shall be so guided that I may exert all the strength I have in the most useful way. Oh if there is an individual on earth whom I would envy, it would be the one who, without noise or show, spends the strength which God has given him for the good of others!" Throughout the manuscripts which he wrote at the beginning of his career, his favorite words were: "My duty," "My duty." These were his watchwords through life. That life was a happy, because it was a busy one. So long as young men were his pupils, his "duty" was to correct their faults and invigorate their character. After they had gone from his supervision, he welcomed them to his fellowship, for he loved them, and his "duty" was to manifest his feeling of Christian brotherhood. In the punctual discharge of his obligations, he rose early as usual on Saturday, the twenty-eighth of January, 1871; he attended the morning devotions of the academy, reading and commenting on a part of the fourteenth chapter of Mark's gospel; he conducted at noon the last public devotional exercise of the week, reading the hymn: "Show pity, Lord! O Lord, forgive;" he spent the afternoon in literary services at Boston and Cambridge, and returned in the rail-car to Andover on Saturday evening. Rev. Dr. Wellman, of Newton, sat with him in the car. "I was delighted," he says, "to meet Dr. Taylor. After giving me one of those earnest and warm-hearted greetings peculiar to himself, he engaged in conversation; was very cheerful, so much so that he was congratulated upon his good health and spirits. 'Yes,' he said, 'I am very well. A few days ago one of my former pupils asked me: When shall you begin to grow old?' As I was to preach the next day in the seminary chapel," continues Dr. Wellman, "he expressed a desire that I should have some reference in the selection of my sermons to the students of the academy; and then he spoke earnestly and tenderly, and with great fatherly affection of the boys, and manifested a deep interest in their spiritual welfare. 'My students,' he said, 'need simple, direct sermons, such as a faithful pastor would preach to his own young people, when he wished to secure immediate spiritual results. The students should be made to see that religion is reasonable. There must be conviction before there is conversion.' He uttered this last sentence with an earnest gesture, and with great emphasis on the word reasonable. During the whole hour's ride he continued cheerful and highly animated. At the end of the ride he gave me a cordial invitation to take tea with him after the close of my services on the Sabbath. I thankfully engaged to do so. On the next morning the chapel bell rang as usual for public worship; and as we were preparing to attend the service, we were bewildered and stunned by the announcement,—Dr. Taylor is dead."

For some years Dr. Taylor had been troubled with a rheumatic affection; and this, attacking the heart, was probably the occasion of his decease. He complained on the Sabbath morning of a stricture across his chest; still he prepared himself to explain parts of the first and second chapters of the book of Acts before his large Bible-class. He was importuned to omit this biblical exercise and to remain at home. "My duty is to my scholars;" "My first duty lies with the school," were among the last words which he ever uttered. He went forth through the deep and rapidly falling snow; he reached his favorite academy; the bell was yet tolling; his pupils were assembling; he walked a few steps into the vestibule, and fell; he uttered not a word. In less than two minutes after he fell, more than a hundred of his pupils were gathered around him; fully two hundred were soon assembled. In about ten minutes he died, in the arms of his son. He had reached the age of sixty-three years, three months, twenty-six days. The time of his death was about twenty minutes after nine o'clock, on the stormy morning of the twenty-ninth of January, 1871. On that day the whole town of Andover was startled with the rumor that the strong man had fallen. On the next morning, the wires of the telegraph were vibrating with the intelligence through the land. Letters and telegrams came back from officers of colleges, judges of courts, lawyers, and clergymen. The speaker of the House of Representatives, at Washington, sent the following telegram to the son in whose arms Dr. Taylor died: "January 31: I have just read with surprise and profound sorrow the announcement of your father's death. Accept of my deepest sympathy in your personal grief, and my appreciation of the great loss which the cause of education has sustained." Resolutions in honor of Dr. Taylor were passed by the Faculty of Dartmouth College, by associations of teachers, and by the alumni of Phillips Academy, in various towns and cities of the land. His funeral was solemnized at two o'clock on the afternoon of the second of February, in the large hall of the academy. About thirteen or fourteen hundred persons crowded the hall. A funeral address was delivered; prayers were offered by Professor Taylor, of Andover, and Professor Noyes, of Dartmouth College. Professor Phelps offered a prayer at the house of Dr. Taylor, and President Smith, of Hanover, at the grave. On the Sabbath following, Professor Churchill, of Andover, preached a commemorative sermon in the chapel of the Theological Seminary. In that sermon he said: "I owe to him,—and there are hundreds, yes, thousands, now living, who would eagerly join me in the admission,—I owe to him more than to any earthly teacher besides, more than any amount of gratitude or service on my part could adequately repay." The senior class of the academy, whose affection for their teacher was as generous as it was beautiful, published the funeral address and the commemorative sermon in a costly memorial volume. The alumni of the academy intend to raise a fitting monument to perpetuate his name.

EDWARDS A. PARK.

THE SUPPLY OF MINISTERS.¹

IT is an inspired declaration, "Faith cometh by hearing;" and it is not only a significant, but divine, inquiry, "How shall they hear without a preacher?"

In considering our subject,—

First. We will endeavor to gain a correct estimate of the present demand for ministers.

There are but few themes in political economy more instructive than the relation of demand and supply. The laws which it is the province of social science to discover and indicate, prevail, in modified forms, in the province of religious experience. We are told that a demand makes a supply. But this is not true independently of the human intelligence and the human will. The demand must be recognized, otherwise a necessary condition to the laws becoming operative is wanting.

1. The demand for ministers may be viewed primarily with reference to the wants of existing churches.

Our national statistics, as last published, give the number of Congregational churches in the United States as 3,121 and the number of ministers as 3,194, reporting 73 more ministers than churches. In addition to these, there are a few ministers who are not members of any ministerial association, whose names, consequently, do not appear on the list. It may be safe to say that at the time when our statistics were last made up, we had 100 more ministers than we had churches.

But a large proportion of these ministers are not available for the pastoral office. It is to the honor of our denomination that we hold a prominent place as the educators of the nation. About 100 of our ministers are presidents of colleges, professors in theological seminaries, universities, or colleges, or holding other educational positions of high responsibility. Ninety-six are engaged as foreign missionaries. About 165 are secretaries or agents of benevolent societies, editors, evangelists, county or city missionaries, or officials in asylums and reformatory institutions. A large number are superannuated. It is creditable to the habits of our ministers, to their knowledge and observance of physical law, and illustrative of the fidelity of God to his promises, that ministers, beyond any other class in society, are favored with long life. Of the 1,638 graduates of Andover Theological Seminary, 515 have been called to their rest. The ages of 487 of these, at the time of their decease, have been ascertained, and their average age was 51 years. This includes the early history of the seminary, when all the graduates were young. The average age of all who died last year was over 68 years. There were ten, or one half of them, whose ages varied from 76 to 90 years. In view of these facts, it is evident that the number cannot be small of our ministers who are too aged to perform regular parochial duties. Others, still, are too feeble in health to meet the responsibilities of the pastoral office. Beside these, a large number have become secularized. In Illinois 8, in Wisconsin 10, in Michigan 16, and in Massachusetts 22, are reported as engaged in business, — 56 in these four States; and if other States were equally specific in their reports, more would be included in the same classification. Some have not left the profession, and yet "stand all the day idle," because no man hath hired them. They may not have given themselves so fully to their work as to keep themselves fresh in it. They may have mistaken their calling; or, as one has expressed it, "when the Lord called somebody else, they answered." There are not a few whose hearts are in the work, and who would gladly have their hands in it also, but the churches, from a false standard of merit, or from unjustifiable fastidiousness, reject them, and leave them to learn in sadness a new application of the Scripture, "Many are called, but few chosen."

Thus, in one way and another, the number of available and acceptable ministers is so reduced that 780 of our churches have neither pastors nor stated supplies. Of these, 129 are supplied temporarily by licentiates, or ministers of other denominations; 651 either have transient supplies, or are deprived of the ministry of the word.

On the other hand, it should be stated that many of these vacant churches are in an interregnum between pastorates, and have regular public worship, many professors and others who are not available as pastors being available as occasional supplies. One hundred and seventy-one ministers are supplying two churches each, and a considerable number of churches are so weak and feeble as to have little more than a nominal existence. Indeed, from 40 to 50 churches, annually, either become extinct, or are dropped from the list.

Still, looking at the subject on all sides, and making allowance for all modifying facts and circumstances, it appears that we have not available ministers enough by some hundreds to supply with pastors our existing churches.

2. The demand for ministers may be viewed with reference to the commission given to us by the Saviour.

This commission was addressed originally to the apostles: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." But this commission was not limited to them. Its obligations are resting on the church to-day. We are not to inquire simply how many existing churches need pastors, how many ministers the existing churches are now calling for, and how many they will liberally support. We are not to rest satisfied with simply supplying the demand in this limited sense, but we are to inquire what are the needs of a perishing world, embracing in our sympathies all for whom Christ died. Expanding our ideas to a comprehension of the divine purposes of conquest, we should rally our forces, and move at once upon the enemies' works.

In this view, what is the demand for ministers? The American Board are needing 40 new missionaries the present year. But, without reference to the foreign field, we are to consider that God is bringing the heathen to us, and that a large proportion of our own population are as truly in need of the gospel as the heathen themselves. Never was there in the history of the world so promising and magnificent a field for Christian work as our own country now presents.

Appreciating the distinction between home missions and church extension, who shall measure the present demand? It is customary in our courts to call in experts as witnesses. With this view the Rev. Dr. Barrows recently addressed to the superintendents of the home missionary work west of the Hudson, the following inquiry: "How many more Congregational ministers could be employed to advantage in your field, if their support were guaranteed by foreign aid, when needed?" The answers received from about one half of the field give the aggregate number of 229.

We need not anticipate what would be the response from the other half of the field. If the broad domain which the American Missionary Association seeks to conquer for Christ were also taken into view, the demand for men would be greatly augmented.

But it is obvious that figures gained in this way are not in themselves a measure of the legitimate demand, at the present time, for ministers of the gospel. In a practical and judicious view of the subject, we must not only inquire how many places there are where there is work to be done, but also whether the condition of the church is such as to render the occupation of these places practicable. The kingdom of Christ is a vast kingdom, and its highest interests cannot be promoted by giving our exclusive attention to any one department; indeed, we must be careful not to give undue prominence to any one department. The kingdom of Christ in its advancement is a growth, and the disproportionate development of any one member of the body produces deformity, and results in the enfeebling of the other members, and, ultimately, in the destruction of the whole. If we give undue prominence to foreign missions to the neglect of the home work, we shall ere long find that our foreign missions will languish for want of strength at home to support them. So, if we turn our attention exclusively to the question, How many men are needed as preachers? and devote our energies simply to procuring these men, we shall be overtaken with disaster; for in fact, practically, we need no more ministers than we can sustain. A shrewd general, in deciding how much to increase his army, takes into consideration not only how many men can have a chance to fight, but how many men he can equip and feed. Because 500 more men could find enough to do in the foreign missionary work, and 500 more in our own country, it does not follow that we need at once 1,000 more ministers. It is possible that our officers at the front, when they call imperiously for more men, in deciding how many to call for, do not always consult sufficiently the commissaries in the rear. Still, one way to energize the commissary department, is, to get more men for them to feed. 'Within rational limits the demand creates a supply.

In the experience of the American Board it has often been found that a new missionary, through his circle of relatives, and by his personal influence, raises up so many new friends to the missionary enterprise, or so intensifies the interest of old friends, as to increase the pecuniary resources of the Board enough to provide for his own support. The same principle is doubtless illustrated in the home field. Still, there is a limit beyond which this principle cannot effectively operate. There is a natural limit to resources as well as to men.

Avoiding all extravagant or visionary ideas, we cannot contemplate our commission from the Great Head of the church in its relations to the present condition of our own country, even under the limitations which the resources of the church and the symmetrical development of Christian forces impose, without having forced upon us the conclusion that there is a present demand for many more ministers, in addition to those who are needed as pastors of existing churches.

Still it is a noticeable fact, that there are men who argue that we have already a surplus of ministers; and there have been men who have reasoned in this way ever since the Christian church existed. This arises from their considering exclusively the wants of existing churches without comprehending the vast plan of the Captain of our salvation in the campaign in which we are engaged. These men draw false conclusions, also, from the fact that there are already many ministers who are unemployed. Because there are such it does not follow that more men are not needed. As well might you tell the military commander that he needs no more men because he never yet brought all his army into an engagement, and because there are already stragglers who have fallen out from his ranks. God has given his church a great work to do, and it is as true now as when Christ was here, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few."

Secondly. Let us consider the sources of the supply of ministers.

Here we look at once to our theological seminaries. Of these we have seven, and they graduated last year 71 students. But last year 56 Congregational ministers died. Thus, taking the difference between these two numbers, we have a gain of 15. Andover Seminary graduated 20 last year, and within the seminary year just 20 of the graduates died.

But besides the supply from our seminaries, we have some students in the theological seminaries of other denominations ; we have others who are not numbered among the graduates of our seminaries, having pursued only the shorter, or special course of study ; we have some who enter the ministry without ever having been connected with any theological seminary, and we also receive some ministers every year from other denominations.

On the other hand, some of the graduates of our seminaries go as foreign missionaries ; others become pastors of churches of other denominations, particularly the Presbyterian ; some of our ministers every year are called to join the ranks of those who are devoted to educational, benevolent, or kindred work ; some become superannuated, or enfeebled, and others are secularized,—in excess of the numbers in these classes who are removed by death.

Perhaps we may reasonably assume that as many are drawn from, or prevented from entering, the pastoral office in our churches in these various ways, each year, as are added to the number of the ministry from all sources outside of the regular classes in our seminaries. To sustain this assumption, although the entire number of ministers reported the last year was 26 more than the previous year, we have the significant coincidence, that while the difference between the number of students graduated at our seminaries last year and the number of deaths among our ministers shows a gain to the ministry of 15, the number of our churches furnished with pastors or stated supplies exceeded the number of the previous year just 15 also.

It has already been stated that from 40 to 50 of our churches become extinct, or drop out from the list, every year ; but it is also true that more than 100 new churches are organized each year.

The actual gain in the number of churches on the list in the Quarterly last year was 78. If we have some hundreds of churches, now, more than we have of ministers available for the pastoral office, and if the number of our churches increases at the rate of 78 a year, while the increase in the number of those who are available for the pastoral office is only 15 a year, how long will it take us to supply the demand? This is a problem which we may dispose of without studying the higher mathematics, or understanding the calculus of variations!

If we increase our energy in the line of church extension, and multiply our new churches at a more rapid rate, then the question as to the supply of the ministry is made only the more serious.

But the question arises, Do the sources of supply afford prospective encouragement? In the middle classes in our seven theological seminaries there were last year 75 students, or 4 more than were graduated last year at these institutions. There were in the junior classes 98, a gain over the number graduated of 27. These will graduate in 1873. It will not require a great deal of energizing in the line of church extension, to advance the ratio of increase in the number of new churches to a correspondence with this prospective increase in the ministry, and leave the formidable problem, already presented, still confronting us.

But let us go back of the theological seminaries, and inquire how the case stands in our colleges. Here we are compelled to say the tendency of things is against us. Amherst, Bowdoin, Dartmouth, Harvard, Middlebury, Williams, and Yale Colleges, and the University of Vermont, our eight New-England institutions, from 1815 to 1865, a period of fifty years, furnished 16,240 graduates, of whom 4,109 became ministers, or about 25 per cent. Dividing these fifty years into decades, the percentage of ministers in the sum total of the alumni is as follows:—

First decade	30	per cent.
Second "	35	" "
Third "	27	" "
Fourth "	20	" "
Fifth "	18	" "

Thus there has been in the supply of the ministry relative to the number of the alumni a falling off in the last forty years of 17 per cent. This falling off in the percentage of ministers is explained, in part, by the fact that formerly but few were graduated at our colleges who did not enter professional life; while now, many obtain a liberal education as a preparation for business, or as a personal accomplishment.

Let us, therefore, take another view of the facts. These colleges furnished, in these successive decades, the following number of ministers:—

First decade.	688
Second "	988
Third "	946
Fourth "	730
Fifth "	757

Thus it appears that they actually furnished, during the 20 years from 1845 to 1865, 447 ministers less than they did in the 20 years immediately preceding. We do not bring the statistics down to a later date than 1865, because it is necessary to allow time for the graduates of our colleges to pursue a theological course before they can enter the ministry. These statistics include the ministers of all denominations; and when we consider this great decline in the actual number of ministers, in connection with the increase in the number of churches and the vast augmentation of our population, we may well regard the question, as to the supply of the ministry, primary and fundamental. But we shall be reminded that there are colleges outside of New England which are to be included in our sources of supply. These institutions are not yet old enough to enable us to institute, respecting them, such a comparison as the foregoing. But these institutions are subject to essentially the same kind of influences as those which affect the New-England colleges. Moreover, the statistics which we have given as to our theological seminaries embrace students from these new colleges.

Viewing the whole field, taking into consideration all the facts, we can find but very little of promise or of hope. We have been praying, these many years, for an open door. All the doors of the earth are open, but where are the men who are ready to enter them?

Thirdly. Let us now turn our attention to the obstacles to the supply of ministers.

I. Among these obstacles we must mention the small salaries paid to ministers. We read in the Scriptures, "Ye have the poor always with you," and our churches do not seem to lack in the verification of this statement. Many of our ministers, though they may not be able to say with Paul, "I know how to abound," can prove their apostolic succession by uniting with him in the declaration, "Everywhere and in all things I am instructed . . . to suffer need." This is nothing new. A "Society for the Relief of Aged and Destitute Clergymen" was organized by Unitarians in Massachusetts, in 1849. A committee of this society, in 1854, sent out a circular to each clergyman in the State, to each bishop of the Protestant-Episcopal and Methodist churches, and to many ministerial associations and theological seminaries in other States, asking, among other questions, the following: "What is the average of ministerial salaries in your association?" In response they received the opinions of 1,500 clergymen. From Vermont came the answer, "So far as we can judge of the whole State, the average salary is about $450 to $500." A particular county, "$350." A bishop of the Protestant-Episcopal church replied, "Of 130 churches the average is $490. Of these, 29 are in cities with an average of $1,178; the remaining 100 average about $300." From the Baptists in Massachusetts came the reply, "Of 20 ministers, average $372." The Methodists of the same State answered, "Probably from $200 to $250." The Methodists in Hampden County, Mass., answered, "Of 63 ministers, the average salary is exactly $304.60." A Congregational Association in Worcester County gave as their average salary "$606.25."

From the various replies it appears that the Unitarians received the highest salaries, many of their churches having funds; the Congregationalists the next highest; the Episcopalians much less; the Baptists less than they, and the Methodists least of all. This committee did not succeed in obtaining the exact statistics for the whole of any State.

In 1851, leaving out the salary of the bishop and of two metropolitan divines, the Episcopal clergymen of the whole State of Massachusetts received on an average only $375. In all the denominations the salaries were then very low. There has been considerable improvement since that period. At the present time the largest salary received by any Episcopal clergyman in Massachusetts is $8,000, and the smallest is $150. The average in that denomination in the whole State does not exceed $700,—about the sum paid a common day-laborer, and less than is paid a city dressmaker!

In the Presbyterian church, of 2,100 ministers, whose salaries are reported, 622 receive less than $600; 224 receive less than $500. And according to the recital given by the Committee on the Sustentation Fund, at the last meeting of the General Assembly, the hardships and sufferings of some of their ministers are pitiable, and in their relation to the churches shameful! If all the facts were known respecting the salaries of Congregational ministers, we fear that the revelation would be the occasion of humiliation.

The Congregational churches in Connecticut give the most thorough statistics in this regard. The average salary of the ministers of our denomination in that State in 1861, was $812; in 1865, $933, and in 1870, $1,335. This is probably a better record than can be shown by any other State. The average salary paid to all the missionaries of the American Home Missionary Society is about $700. The average salary, however, is a poor test of the real condition of a large part of the ministers, for a small number of high salaries bring up the average, and conceal the sufferings of many who are feeding a "few sheep in the wilderness." Here and there a popular man commands a high salary; but, notwithstanding the improvement which has been made the last few years, it is still true that the mass of the ministers are poorly paid, and this serves to deter young men from entering the ministry.

2. Another obstacle to the supply of ministers is found in the materialistic tendencies of the age.

The public mind is occupied with schemes of worldly aggrandizement. Immense fortunes, suddenly amassed, have dazzled the vision of men. The question now is not, simply, "What shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or wherewithal shall we be clothed?" but how can we become millionnaires? Trade, commerce, engineering, speculation, and peculation have presented such brilliant prospects, that the community is wild. The mania pervades not the world's people merely, but the church as well. Those who do not possess wealth assume the appearance of having it. Extravagance is the prevailing vice; and even by many of those who are prominent in the church a family is esteemed according to the style in which they live. Moral philosophy and theology have in large measure been supplanted by physical science. There is a decadence of religious faith, and materialism is regnant. There was a period when the zeal of the church had wellnigh exclusive reference to the soul's existence in the world to come, and was comparatively oblivious of the present needs of humanity. Now the drift is in the opposite direction. A fire which destroys millions of property, and exposes thousands of human beings to physical suffering, moves the whole civilized world, while to exposure to the fires of hell there is comparative indifference. This world hides from public view the next. Our young men feel this. They pre-eminently belong to the present age, and are subject to its tendencies. The ministry looks tame. They are drawn away of their own lust, and enticed.

3. Another obstacle to the supply of ministers is the present crisis in our system of education.

We hear much said of "the new education," and of the importance of taking a "new departure" in our educational system. In olden time, education was placed in the hands of ecclesiastics; now there is danger of its passing out even from under their supervision. The present is a transition period. The American college as a religious institution, and the American university as a State institution, are coming into sharp competition. The two systems are distinct. We have, on the one hand, the Christian academy and college; on the other hand, as the outgrowth of the common school system, the high school and the State university. In New England, especially, the university presents its claims not so much as a State institution, but rather as meeting the demand for a broader culture. The discussion of the claims of these two systems would be apart from the province of this paper, but there is one aspect of the subject which is essential to the completeness of our presentation. The American college is the child of the church, and its primary design was "to supply the churches with a learned, pious, orthodox ministry." The university is Christian only in a generic sense, and its design has primary reference to the interests of the State. The cardinal fact is, that we can never depend upon the university system to supply the church with ministers. The all-important question for us to consider as the servants of the church, is not as to the relative claims of physical science and classical literature, of elective studies and a prescribed curriculum, but rather of an institution under influences which are Christian simply in a generic sense, and one which is under Evangelical control, and hallowed with revivals of religion. More than a hundred years ago, President Clapp, of Yale College, wrote: "Some, indeed, have supposed that the only design of colleges was to teach the arts and sciences, and that religion is no part of a college education." That old idea has new force now, by having already embodied itself in institutions richly endowed. Our young men are within the sweep of its mighty influence, and it is drawing them away from the sacred calling.

4. Still another obstacle to the supply of ministers is found in the false standards cherished by many of our churches as to qualifications for the ministry.

The popular demand is for the sensational in public discourse. Eccentricities and extravagancies attract and please. The rage is for rhetoric. Ability to instruct, common-sense, and even spirituality, as qualifications for the ministry, seem in some places obsolete, or at least antiquated. The demand is for young men. The late Prof. Shepard, in his vigorous style, wrote, "The Scriptures say, 'milk for babes,' but the churches call for babes to dispense the milk."

It is not so in other relations. When our government wanted lawyers to argue our cause before the great international court, two men were selected, each of whom is over seventy years of age. When one of these declined the responsibility on account of feeble health, two more were selected, the youngest of whom is fifty-three; and the average age of the four is sixty-four.

The committee of arrangements for this National Council selected as a preacher, a father in the ministry, who, although wellnigh threescore years and ten, has yet the vigor of youth, and whose gray locks we all delight to honor. And yet, with reference to the demands of the churches, we hear it said that the minister who is over fifty has passed the "dead line." The children and youth of the present day not only claim the Sabbath school as an institution peculiarly their own, but are often allowed to decide who shall be the pastors of the churches. Hence it is, that, however the lambs may fare, it is often true now, as in the days of the immortal Milton, that, "The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed."

We would not under-estimate the importance of our churches keeping themselves in sympathy with the young; but we are not yet quite prepared to believe that in order to do so it is necessary for them to make themselves verdant.

In the present state of things, not only are we called to consider how we can induce men to enter the ministry, but also another question, scarcely less important, How can we keep them there?

One other topic claims our attention.

Fourthly. What practical measures shall we adopt for the supply of ministers?

I. We must take cheerful views of the office of the ministry.

We should not give undue prominence to the poverty or the privations of ministers. These may be made the subject of comment at proper times and in a proper way, in order to secure relief or promote reform. But if great prominence is given to them, we present the office of the ministry in a mercenary aspect, and deter young men from entering it.

The publishing in our papers of the salary offered when a minister has a call, or is settled, may sometimes gratify pride, and may tend to raise the standard of ministerial support; but it is in one regard prejudicial to the office of the ministry, because it presents it before the public in its commercial aspect. The exhibition of "the shady side" has its uses, but what we most need is to look at its "sunny side."

If many ministers are poor, they are not the only poor people in the world, nor are they the poorest. One graduate of Andover Seminary died last year as a town pauper, but it was a rare instance, and not entirely disconnected from personal obliquity. If the poverty of ministers is onerous, it at least saves them from sudden reverses! The careful observer has ample illustration of the truth of the inspired statement, that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." There is no lesson which the community needs at the present time more than that of frugality and economy; and the ministers, even though they make a virtue of necessity, have an opportunity to set before their people an example in this regard, and to do it cheerfully. Their condition, so far as this world is concerned, is not altogether a sombre one. If ministers do not live as fast as other men, they make it up by living longer, as the statistics already given prove. Money is to be prized for the advantages which it brings, but many of these advantages are secured to the minister by the exalted character of his profession. In England, in the Established church, there is a society for the collection of second-hand clothing for the use of poor curates. And yet those curates, in their old, threadbare garments, are freely admitted to society from which wealthy artisans and merchants are excluded. This is not the case, to the same extent at least, in this country; but it is true here, that that society from which a godly minister is excluded by his poverty is not worthy to be coveted by anybody. Superstitious reverence for the sacred office has indeed passed away, and a man now is respected more for what he is, than for the office which he holds; and this change is not without its advantages.

There is still sufficient respect for the office of the ministry to secure for a consistent minister great social privileges. There is no other class in the community who, as a whole, obtain companions for life, who have such sterling worth, such varied culture, and so many of the highest graces of womanly character, as are found in the wives of ministers. It is true even now that the children of ministers are respected as ministers' children, and this fact helps them into positions of influence and honor. The ministry, from a simply financial view, may not seem specially attractive. It is not desirable that it should. The sanctity of the office, the highest interests of the church, require that young men should enter upon the work of preaching the Gospel from higher and holier motives.

There is a cheerful view of the office of the ministry. He who fills this office is called to the habitual contemplation of the most exalted themes. If the dwellers among mountains realize, in their own development, the influence of the sublime scenery with which they are familiar, how much more does the true minister feel the expanding and the exalting influence of his communion with God! There is a luxury in doing good, contrasted with which all the pleasures of the worldling are as ashes. And there are no others who have such occasion as the ministers to sing, —

"The hill of Zion yields
A thousand sacred sweets,
Before we reach the heavenly fields,
Or walk the golden streets."

If we would induce young men to enter the ministry, we must take a cheerful view of our office —

"And let our joys be known."

2. We should aid in every practicable way young men in preparing for the ministry.

We should favor the establishment of Christian academies, so that young men may be brought under more positive evangelical influences than can be exerted in a high school supported by taxation. We should endow these institutions so liberally that young men will not be drawn away from them by the free tuition of our public schools. Such institutions as Phillips Academy, at Andover, and Williston Seminary, at Easthampton, in Massachusetts, and the preparatory departments in our western colleges, are as essential to the supply of ministers as our theological seminaries themselves.

Without opposing State universities or any other universities which the general cause of education may seem to demand, we should sustain and richly endow at least one Christian college in each Commonwealth, and to this end we should augment greatly the resources of the College Society.

In selecting an institution for the education of our sons, we should send them to a Christian college rather than to any university, however ancient or renowned, where the prevailing influences tend to divert them from the ministry, and alienate them from the Christian faith.

We should see that our theological seminaries have all the funds which they need. We should expand and energize the work of the American Education Society. That we must depend largely for the supply of ministers upon young men from families of moderate means, is shown by the fact that the Education Society has already afforded assistance to 5,858 young men. And the work has as yet only begun.

3. We should endeavor to secure fidelity to the claims of our own denomination.

We have been more generous than just. Through the American Education Society we have aided in preparing for the ministry young men who belonged to seven denominations.

While cherishing an interest in the church universal, and holding ourselves in readiness to help on its progress, we should feel persuaded that we can accomplish even this most effectually, in the end, by adhering to our own polity, and standing by our own colors. Ministers should seek a settlement in our own churches, rather than be coquetting with outsiders, or even heeding the advances which they may make.

Our churches, while we have ministers unemployed, should consider the obligation to hire them, so far as is practicable, rather than persons belonging to other denominations. Our churches employed, last year, about fifty ministers of other denominations.

Children should be taught the simple, scriptural principles of Congregationalism, and be so trained in them that they will not afterwards wander from the fold.

4. We should seek out appropriate persons to enter upon the work of preparing for the ministry.

Parents should inquire whether there are not among their children those whom they should consecrate to this work.

Pastors and teachers should have the same object in view,—selecting appropriate persons. Piety, though essential, is not the only qualification to be sought. The present age demands personal magnetism. It is a peculiar quality. We know that when we approach some people they repel us, towards others we feel indifferent, while there are others still to whom we are instantly and instinctively drawn. What this magnetic quality is we may not be able to analyze or explain, but we know that there is such a thing. In the language of Goethe, "A logician might not see it, but a soul would." In what it consists? the conditions of its exercise? whether it may be cultivated? are questions which, whether in the province of physical science or of psychology, are worthy of the most profound study. This magnetic power, being pre-eminently the demand of the present age, peculiarly qualifies one for ministerial work; and hence, so far as is possible, should be sought for in selecting candidates for the sacred office. We are taught that, "In a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honor, and some to dishonor." We are all "earthen vessels," but we should guard against unduly multiplying the vessels to dishonor. While there is this need of caution, there is still occasion to seek many new vessels.

5. We should seek especially revivals of religion.

A baptism from on high will deliver the churches from parsimony and meanness wherever they exist. It will deliver us all from the materialistic tendencies of the age. It will correct the standards cherished by many of our churches as to qualifications for the ministry. It will keep some ministers from becoming secularized. It will increase the efficiency of all who are in the ministry. It will renew the hearts of our youth, and make our educational institutions the sources whence shall issue streams to make glad the city of our God.

When our Lord declared, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few," He added, "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." Whatever other measures we may adopt, or what means soever we may employ, we need to feel that a special emphasis is given to prayer, from the fact that it is the only means which our Saviour mentions, and earnestly heed his injunction to pray.

CHRISTOPHER CUSHING.

Boston.

THE CONSERVATIVE ELEMENT IN PROTESTANTISM.¹

OUR Lord said to his disciples, "Be not ye called Rabbi ; for one is your Master, even Christ ; and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father upon the earth ; for one is your Father which is in heaven. Neither be ye called masters : for one is your Master, even Christ. But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant. And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased ; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted." (Matt. xxiii. 8-12.)

This Scripture — so artless, yet sublime — teaches that perfect equality, or independence of one another's control, is the right, and the duty, of all Christian disciples. It commands them not to usurp authority, — not to accept it even when it is offered them ; and, on the other hand, it bids them not submit to the dominion of any man or body of men. "Call no man master, neither be ye called masters," — expresses the generous and manly sentiment which should ever inspire them. Yet there is a Father, and a Master, these words also teach, to whom all the friends of Christ should be in subjection. They are under an authority which is heaven-high ; which surpasses immeasurably any human dominion, having its centre in God, both the Son and the Father.

The twofold truth which I have thus traced in our Lord's words, — the doctrine of a human brotherhood and a divine authority in the Christian church, — has been made to have some special claims on our attention at the present time. And it is that portion of the subject which looks Godward, rather than that looking manward, which we, as Congregationalists, may need to consider. There is a feeling in the community — how prevalent I know not, yet uttered from time to time by leaders in other branches of the Protestant church — that the kingdom of Christ, so far as organized on the simple New-England plan, is destitute of a wholesome authority ; that, while recognizing the brotherhood of the faithful, stimulating independent thought, and sacredly guarding the individual conscience, our system of order fails to overawe and subdue men ; not begetting within them that docility, that mystic faith, those passive virtues and graces, and that profound piety which are needful, and which the soul longs for in its reflective moments. And it has been suggested that we must reorganize our congregational body,—on what plan is not definitely stated, only that it should be very “broad,” and so that it shall be, in many of its externals at least, an imitation of the papal church. By some contrivance of this nature, it is believed that we may secure the authoritative, or conservative, element which we are said now to lack, so as to meet the deep want which is beginning to be felt, and help control the lawless tendencies which are so fearfully on the increase throughout the Protestant world.

This proposal to inaugurate a new ecclesiastical regime, the purpose of which shall be to save us from religious anarchy, seems to me, after giving it such thought as I could, to have originated in fears which are really groundless, while it very strangely and illiberally keeps out of view what is now proposed as the theme of remark,—namely, The Conservative Element in Protestantism.

The name Protestants, which a single and comparatively unimportant event caused to be fixed on Luther and his friends, has in itself a meaning, a suggestiveness of rebellion against all authority, which does injustice to the moderate spirit of the reformers. What was that against which they protested ? Not ecclesiastical control, but an innovation on the part of the civil authorities. It was a law of the land that the civil power should not have jurisdiction in religious matters. This law had been disobeyed by the German Diet, in issuing a decree against the reformers. From this unlawful edict Luther appealed to a general council of the church,—the legitimate authority on all such questions,—accompanying his appeal with a protest against the action of the Diet in thus overstepping its proper limits. It was from this circumstance that he and his followers came to have the name “Protestants” fixed upon them. They were contending for ancient usage, for legitimate authority ; yet they are made to appear as recusants and innovators. They were animated by a genuine conservatism. They stood in the old ways, and inquired for the ancient paths. The epithet with which they are designated in history was given them by their enemies, and is far from adequately representing them. They experienced the same injustice which in this country has been meted out to men resisting the innovations of corrupt political parties. As the true conservative — he who is striving to restore the government to its original basis — is often called a radical here ; so there the true conservatives — those who contended for the ancient religious order — were stigmatized as Protestants. The term cannot now be laid aside ; and that peculiar odium which it once suggested is no longer associated with it. We should remember, however, that a literal definition of the word is not an adequate description of the Christians to whom it has been applied ; that whatever of disregard for constituted authorities it may seem to imply, Protestants, nevertheless, can be, and in the first instance were, order-loving, conservative, and reverent men.

Passing from this struggle with the German States, — which was merely an incident of the Reformation, — if we look candidly at the great struggle with the church of Rome, we shall find the Protestants manifesting a constant regard for the element of authority in religion. It was for this, in fact, that they so earnestly contended. We do not understand them, if we think that they desired to throw off obligation, to break from a wise Christian control, and rush into a state where they should not be responsible to any power. The issue between them and Rome was not, authority or no authority ; but, is Rome the rightful authority ? Their battle-cry was not, we refuse to pay allegiance to anything ; but, there is something back of the papacy which only has a right to our allegiance. It matters not that their movement is called a reformation. They introduced no novelties. Airy visions did not inspire them. They pointed to no dreamy future, but to the solid facts of history.

They sought to revive the pure doctrine and worship of a previous age. The contest was not for progress in the ordinary sense, but for a return to the practice of apostolic times. However Rome may have viewed them, and whatever history may have said of them, they were animated by a truly conservative spirit. They regarded their antagonist as the great innovator. It was not their aim to introduce a new form of Christianity, or publish strange things in the ears of the people, but to lead men back from present corruptions to the faith and order of the first believers. There was one Personage and one Volume of teachings for them to obey ; and they dared not bend the knee to any other. Here was the only legitimate authority, girt with awful sanctions, which no one might venture to usurp, and before which all Christians, of whatever name or office, should bow themselves reverently. Did they assail Rome ? It was because she had ceased to pay this homage. Did they seek the overthrow of the papal church ? It was because she had taken the dominion from the King Eternal, and appropriated it to herself. It happened once that a Hebrew king, while engaged in repairing the temple at Jerusalem, found there a copy of the law. The book had been concealed for so long a time as to be nearly forgotten ; and meanwhile, idolatries had been replacing the worship of the true God. The monarch read the volume, was convinced of its authority, and beheld with grief the corruptions around him. Immediately he cut down the groves planted in honor of false gods, destroyed the altars on the high hills, and broke in pieces the images which had been set up. And there was no innovation in this, no casting away of religious obligation ; but, on the contrary, a most genuine conservatism. It was only innovations that he destroyed ; and he did this in order that he might return with his people to the lawful source of authority. In like manner, the reformers, as they were called, looking back of their own times, beyond mediaeval darkness and the origin of the Romish church, to that Star which rose above Judea in the days of Herod, beheld in that the only and the all-sufficient authority ; and it was their deep, yea, their sublime reverence for this legitimate dominion, which gave them the courage to revolt from a usurped supremacy, the slow growth of ages of worldly ambition, which was demanding their allegiance in opposition to the claims of the heaven-born Master.

Still more absurd appears the charge against Protestantism, that it is a revolt from under fixed religious authority, when we take a view of its principles. Even the right of private judgment, that principle which has a somewhat self-reliant look, was not exercised by the Protestants in a revolutionary spirit. They regarded it as an obligation which God had laid on them. The matter of religious faith, as they learned from Luther's exhumed Bible, belonged to each man personally. It could not be delegated to any church or hierarchy, without rebellion against the Most High. He had commanded them to call no man master, and would hold them responsible in their own persons for their religious opinions. Plainly, then, they did not show a wayward spirit, but acted obediently and reverently, in contending for this right. "We find ourselves under a divine authority, which was established ages before your claim, and which shall never pass away," said they to the Roman bishops. "This ancient authority has commanded us to examine and know for ourselves, on all points of Christian doctrine. And we must not neglect this great obligation. We tremble at the thought of the Almighty's displeasure. We dare not disobey him, as we plainly shall if we allow you to prescribe for us our faith and practice."

Not only did this principle spring out of reverence for legitimate authority, it was also limited most carefully. Not "what my reason can discover," but "what my reason tells me that God has revealed," was the ground they took. "The Bible is the religion of the Protestants," Stillingfleet contended in his immortal work; there they found the authority, divine and everlasting, before which they bowed every faculty of their souls. Says the distinguished writer whom I have just named, replying to the charge of the papists that the reformers made each man's judgment supreme in matters of religion, "if you mean discourse—(that is, private 'judgment'), not guiding itself by Scripture, but only by principles of nature, or perhaps by prejudices and popular errors, and drawing consequences not by rule, but by chance, it is by no means true" that we hold such a doctrine. "But if you mean by discourse, right reason grounded on Divine revelation, and common notions written by God in the hearts of all men, and deducing, according to the never-failing rules of logic, consequent deductions from them,—if this be it which you mean by discourse, it is very meet and reasonable and necessary, that men, as in all their actions, so especially in that of greatest importance, the choice of their way of happiness, should be left unto it ; and he that follows this in all his opinions and actions, and does not only seem to do so, follows always God." Much more might be quoted of like import with this, showing that Protestantism was a conservative movement in the beginning ; that it did not seek to release men from a wise oversight and control ; but, on the contrary, to lead them back into the presence of that awful King whose look melts the stoutest heart.

It is for the sake of keeping men near this dread Sovereign, that Protestants have advocated the free circulation of the Scriptures. They have claimed that the revelation of God ought not to be shut away from the common people, thus allowing them to forget Him, and rush unrebuked into worldly follies ; and they have said, "let that volume follow men into all their pursuits, — speaking ever in their ears its commands, its promises and threatenings, — that they may at all times be conscious of the overwatching Sovereign, and walk before Him with reverent minds."

In order that this authority might appear more sacred in the eyes of men, Protestantism has taught that the Scriptures alone are divinely and infallibly inspired. Other writers may err. Neither pope, nor house of bishops, nor general council, is without liability to mistake. Men may accept or reject, as their judgment decides, in regard to anything of this nature. But it is God who speaks through the writers of the Bible, — the God whose authority is absolute and supreme ; and therefore, when we come to those lively oracles, we should bow like children before them, saying, " Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

The reformers also dwelt much on the dignity of Christ's person as the incarnate Word, thus adding another sanction to the authority of the Scriptures. They did not put a mitred prelate, or Mary of Bethlehem, in the place of Christ ; nor did they represent him as a created being ; but they pressed the fact of his equality with the Father, reminding men that it was God manifested in the flesh who travelled over Judea, and spoke those words recorded by his disciples. Do you see anything like a spirit of anarchy, any revolutionary tendency, in this homage paid to Jesus of Nazareth, in this heralding of him as the everlasting Father, whom even the angels worshipped?

That the first opponents of the papal church did not favor recklessness in religion, is evident further from the earnestness with which they insisted on the inability of men to secure Heaven for themselves. They dwelt much on the doctrine of human sinfulness, the scriptural truth that men are lost, dead in trespasses and sins, utterly helpless in their estrangement from God, and needing an Almighty Saviour to take them in his arms and carry them toward Heaven. Did this tend to make men self-reliant, wayward, untractable? Did it not, on the contrary, have a direct tendency to break down their pride, to make them meek and lowly in heart, regardful of the Great Friend who only could save them, willing to submit themselves unquestioningly into his hands?

This centripetal power of Protestantism, holding men back from egotistic recklessness in religion, was increased by the doctrine of justification by faith as preached in all the reformed churches. Absolute trust in the Redeemer, with no dependence on works, penances, ceremonies or sacraments, is the Protestant, as it is also the scriptural way of salvation. Now, any one, who understands the human heart, must see that such teaching as this did not favor a self-reliant spirit. It was directly in the face of pride. It tended to break down the stubborn, rebellious will. It fostered penitence, humility, and every other lowly grace; leading men to surrender themselves absolutely to Christ, to have their will swallowed up in his, to be moulded and guided as he might please.

To compare Protestantism with Romanism, and represent the latter as stronger in the element of authority than the former, is to say that man is mightier than God. For Romanism locates the authority in man and human contrivances, while Protestantism puts God at the centre, and on the throne of the redemptive kingdom. What hierarchy can have such power really to overawe and subdue men, as Jehovah Himself,—speaking directly to every heart, giving us a revelation which we must never disobey, declaring unto us that we are beyond human help, that He only can save us, and that it is our constant duty to lie passively in His hands? We have no occasion to be dissatisfied with our Protestantism; to say that it does not control men, and foster the passive virtues. On the other hand, we should glory in it, as pre-eminently fitted to secure these ends. It has the element of conservatism in the highest degree; and whatever lacks this element is not it, though bearing its name. When you see a wayward child taken from the hands of servants, brought unto the father whom it fears, and set down just beneath his eye, you comprehend the act at once. That child has not been delivered from restraint, but placed under an authority which he trembles to provoke. And so it is in the management of the religious affections. All our efforts and contrivances cannot hold them steadily in due submission; and if we would see them ever meek, reverent and trustful, we must be Protestants,— bringing them continually into God's presence, and leaving and keeping them where they shall feel the glances of his His awful eye.

Having shown that there is a conservative element in Protestantism, and having seen in what it consists, let us now consider some of the consequences of neglecting it in our own religious life. Parallel with the principle of authority runs the principle of liberty. In the same breath which enjoins subjection to God, we are commanded not to be in subjection to men. It is no more certain that we have a Master in heaven, than that we should regard one another simply as brothers and equals. Now, it is the infirmity of some men, that they cannot hold two supplementary and counterbalancing truths in union. If they believe in divine sovereignty, they must reject the doctrine of human freedom. If they accept James on works, they must throw aside Paul on faith. They cannot be reformers without turning their hand against all established institutions. Or, if they reverence the past, they must carry it to that extreme which conserves the bad with the good. Unfortunately, minds of this small grasp have embraced Protestantism; and have claimed to be its special exponents and champions. They have not considered its origin, and what it really was as a movement in the religious world, but have looked rather at the etymological force of its name. They have confounded the meaning of the word with the spirit of the system. Seizing hold of the element of individual liberty, they have let go the element of subjection to lawful authority. They have protested where they ought to have yielded, breaking irreverently from the divine Master, as well as from human masters. The right of private judgment has been made supreme and final. All limitations have been taken from it. "God must be altogether such an one as our reason says he ought to be. If there is anything in the Bible which does not commend itself to our judgment, that Scripture is an interpolation,—it must be thrown out of the sacred volume. We are sufficient of ourselves to obtain heaven ; and therefore we refuse to accept Jesus as an Almighty Saviour, and to trust ourselves absolutely in His hands. Reason and conscience, as we exercise them, are the sovereign judges. To this tribunal every statement and doctrine must come,—be they the commandments of men, or utterances claiming to proceed from God." Now, this is not Protestantism, whatever the men holding these extreme views may say. They claim only to be the consistent followers of Luther,—the Protestants of the Protestants ; but they have rejected the vital principle of the reformers,—unquestioning submission to the Scriptures. They have broken away from that centripetal force which there is in the doctrines of human dependence and an infallible revelation, and, yielding to the centrifugal force which there is in the doctrine of private judgment, they have shot off from the orbit of genuine, comprehensive Protestantism, into a dreary and conceited individualism. And what are some of the consequences of this devotion to a half-truth,—of this disregard of authority in religion, and exalting over all things the individual judgment ?

It has resulted in a shallow philanthropy. The fact insisted on by sound Protestants, that men have to do personally with a divine sovereign, tends to keep the ideas of a God and an eternal world near the mind. No opportunity is thus given for men to lose sight of the soul's destiny. It is a thought ever pressing into the mind of both preacher and hearer, that we must labor for man's everlasting welfare in order to show him any true affection. But this spurious Protestantism tends to make men oblivious of the unseen world. It teaches the individual that his own judgment is supreme. Feeling that he does not need the guidance of a higher power, he soon forgets that power, — or at most has only very faint notions of it. Thus, everything but this life, and man as he now is, becomes an unreality. And hence grows the impression that our love for men should be shown in seeking their temporal well-being. To feed the hungry, clothe the naked, warm the cold, free the captives, has been the chief concern. And all this is commendable and scriptural ; but it leaves what is infinitely more important uncared for. The great God, and the life which never ends, are shut out of sight. Religion is confounded with morality ; charity takes the place of faith ; efforts to make men happy here, crowd out all thoughts of their happiness hereafter. Wealth is poured forth freely to found hospitals, asylums, and schools for the education of the intellect ; but those institutions which are for the securing of immortal blessings, receive small support, — resting chiefly on the gifts of the poor and lowly. Man, proud, egotistic, enthroned upon his own reason, — walks unabashed over the claims of his Maker ; and an earthborn literature, a pagan uprightness in business, a philanthropy which feeds the body and starves the soul, blow their trumpets before them, expecting to be honored of us, as the true Christianity, — the successors of the apostles and reformers.

From this humanitarianism, the descent has been rapid to naturalism, skepticism, and indifferentism. From rejecting portions of the Bible, men have gone on till they have altogether discarded it. Clinging to the falsehood that to judge for one's self is the whole of Protestantism, they have struck out a verse here, and a verse there, as certain theories of their own framing required. And from this they have gone on, — cancelling the imprecatory Psalms, lopping off Genesis and the Apocalypse, throwing out the Gospel of John, rejecting the Old Testament and accepting only a small portion of the New. And still, as their own sovereign judgment has dictated, they have whittled down this small residuum, until finally the whole has disappeared ; Christ, the prophets, and the apostles are wheeled into the line of ordinary mortals, the Scriptures go into the rank of other legends, scraps of history and biography, and snatches of poetry ; a revelation is superfluous as well as impossible ; no man is our master, and there is nothing higher than human reason : and thus the soul exults, sitting upon its throne of egotism, looking round with a savage smile on the ruin it has made, rejoicing in the false and fatal impression that it has only carried out the tendencies of Protestantism. There is universal distrust ; no one is confided in, it matters not with what sanction heralded. A miracle is a self-evident absurdity ; inspiration, except as possessed by all men, is a dream of the superstitious ; the clerical calling is not sacred any more than the legal or mercantile ; public worship is not obligatory, let men say what they will to the contrary ; the Sabbath is a device of man, and we may use it for labor, rest, or pleasure, as at any time shall seem best to us.

I have barely indicated some of the disastrous results which flow from neglecting the conservative element in Protestantism, leaving it for your own minds to complete the picture. And this you will readily do, from what your own observation has taught you. You know only too well and sadly, that there is more than ample ground for all these statements. The fatal experiment has been tried near us and amongst us. It has put lover and friend far from us ; it has taken some of our dearest kindred, brethren in the same church, those who studied with us at the school, the college, the seminary, men who laid their hands upon us, it may be, when we assumed the ministerial office, — our kindest neighbors, acquaintances in business, the young, the amiable, the loved and the longed-for ; it has drawn them into its specious current, and swept them on past the landmarks of truth ; and we have seen them struggling in eddies, dashed upon rocks, hurled down cataracts, or left to moan out their lives on some desolate shoal, weary of existence, but afraid to die ; loathing their error, yet not able to come to the truth.

The recoil from this extreme, if the signs of the times do not deceive me, has already begun ; and there is much occasion for anxiety lest that recoil should be, not in the direction of genuine Protestantism, but toward the despotism of the papal church, or some of its imitations. Be not surprised if only a few of those who have gone out from us ever return into our fellowship. There are certain laws of the human mind, in addition to the signs about us, from which we may foretell the probable result. One extreme begets another ; and where men have forgotten their true Master, the feeling of dependence exposes them to the nearest imposture. We are conscious of weakness. There is something in us which reaches upward ever, in quest of a stronger arm. We may forget it at times, but we cannot forget it always. In the thoughtful hour, in the solitude of the closet or the mountain, when misfortune sweeps our earthly stays from under us, that sentiment makes itself felt. We are sick of this vaunted liberty. Self is a poor thing to rely on. We want a master ; one to whose will our will may be yielded ; who shall control us, lifting from us the burden of self-direction, and permitting us the luxury of simple obedience without regard to issues. Now, in throwing the conservative element out of Protestantism, and teaching men simple self-reliance, violence has been done to this tender longing of the soul. Ardent intellects have rioted for a time in their much-vaunted freedom of thought. They have deemed it something godlike to burst from all creeds and book-revelations, and ideas of a dread Jehovah sitting in authority above them. They have railed at everything of this nature as cowardly and superstitious, and have rushed on for a time in their fancied independence, exclaiming, "This is manliness ; we stand for the equality of the race ; we heed the voice which speaks within us, not servilely obeying Moses, Jesus and Paul." But in a little while this tempest of egotism has subsided in some of the more reflective natures. They have sighed for an element in their religion which this worship of reason has not secured. Yet they never could go back to the simple Scriptures. They have ridiculed the truths of sin, atonement, redemption and eternal judgment, till dislike of any such doctrines has fixed itself firmly in their minds. And here is another body of ostensible Christians, the papal church, or some half-way house to it, famous for the extent to which it carries the principle of authority. This principle they are seeking, and have long pined for it, and here they can reach it without going back into their old connections. I am far from saying that the effete Errorism about us is on the point of becoming ritualistic or papal. But many earnest souls, whom a mutilated Protestantism has tantalized and wearied out, are looking in that direction. It is a shorter and easier road than any other to that which they desire. They can reach it without returning to the evangelical position they have left. It is a system in which the element of authority is palpable, — residing not in God, and certain spiritual facts, but in ecclesiastical machinery. It ministers to the artistic taste in its pictures, music, architecture, gorgeous ceremonies and festivals. It has but little to do, practically, with the Bible, leaves Christ and human guilt, and the duties of repentance and faith, more or less in the background. It is a convenient refuge for one who is tired of religious thought, and wishes to lie passive in the hand of a religious master. Thus it is that extremes meet. The tendencies to such a meeting are not few or unacknowledged around us. Our eyes have been closed to what is passing, if we are yet to discover that the men who preach down Puritanism are paving the way for Romanism. They are begetting, in themselves and their disciples, a settled hatred of plain New-England Christianity, and are cherishing a love for the artistic and sensuous in worship, a craving for Sabbaths which shall be holidays rather than holy days, between which and Romanism, or, at least, ritualism, the passage is short and easy. It seems strange and paradoxical ; nevertheless, we have only to lift up our eyes to see that it is true, that those who have rejected the elements of authority in Protestantism, and are preaching individual opinion as the only guide in religion, are, more than any other class of men, helping to bring upon themselves and their countrymen the dismal bondage of the papacy. We have great occasion to thank God, that this reactionary movement is confined to so limited a region, and that it does not take with it the honest hearts of the masses. It is confined to a morbid and disappointed few. There is not life enough in it to make it of much service, wherever it goes. The instincts of the vast body of our countrymen, throughout the land, are still, as they ever have been, strongly Protestant ; and it needs but little care, in pointing out to them from time to time the nature of their religious institutions, to keep them steady and unflinching adherents to the principles of our fore-fathers.

We have, then, two systems of error,—absolutism and individualism,—one on either hand. They are alike in many points ; for neither of them gives prominence to the authority of God, the facts of the spiritual world, the person of the Redeemer, human guilt, and the justification of the sinner by faith in Christ. Both locate the religious authority in a creature ; one in each individual for himself, the other in the priesthood, or its "infallible" head. Neither of them stands on a truly evangelical basis ; both of them allow but a secondary place to Biblical doctrine. And yet they are strongly antagonistic ; since one makes the judgment of each man supreme, while the other demands the absolute submission of the individual. Hence, as the Papist becomes weary of his servitude under the hierarchy, and sighs for personal independence, we may expect him to pass into Individualism ; and as the victim of Individualism grows tired of his speculations, and longs for rest under some weighty dominion, we may expect him to seek the position of the Papist. But in this vacillation,—this swinging to and fro of uneasy minds,—there will be no trace of the kingdom of God ; no renewing of the spirit in Him who alone can give peace.

Protestantism is our only hope,—the world's only hope. Its foundations are laid deep in God and Christ, and the life everlasting. Like Individualism, it preaches liberty, and like Romanism, it preaches authority. But, unlike them both, it makes that liberty, and that authority to centre in God. Individualism brings us to each man's judgment, saying, "this is the supreme tribunal" ; Romanism takes us to the priesthood, exclaiming, "here is the ultimate authority." But Protestantism, taking us back of men, whether the one or the many, leads us up to the throne of God, and says, "no man is your master ; but here sitteth One to whom you should pay absolute homage. You are free from me, and free from your own mind's deceitfulness ; and if you would secure that liberty, you must recognize His authority as supreme." If we are genuine Protestants, grasping the whole of the twofold truth,—the truth which says, on the one hand, "ye are all brethren," and on the other, "you have a Master in heaven," — if we can comprehend both parts of this living unity, without the union of which neither part is good for anything, and can preach them both, and show them in our Christian experience, we shall do much towards securing that religious liberty which is without license, — much toward upholding in the church a principle of authority which shall be free from despotism.

It is hardly necessary for me to add here, if I have been understood thus far, that our truest representative of Protestantism is the historical New-England church ; the church which our fathers founded in the fear and love of God, and which the Congregational Union is seeking to extend throughout the land. And the more faithfully we can keep to the historical pattern, not relying on external organization, or on architecture and formalism, but getting all our centralizing force in those weighty spiritual truths which it is the office of the pulpit to proclaim, the more certain shall we be of that well-grounded authority, from under which believers shall gradually cease to revolt, till all are one, and the world shall know that Christ was sent by the Father. I do not object to the fellowship of the churches ; on the contrary, I hold it to be vastly important. I believe in the association, and in the local and State conference. The National Council also, it seems to me, cannot too soon become a feature of our Congregationalism. We need it for the sake of the esprit de corps, — that each local church, and every member of it, may be continually filled with the great wave of zeal and love flowing from the entire body. We need it, too, as a protecting force, — that the claims of charitable societies, seeking our contributions, may be duly accredited, and that they may be reorganized, if necessary, or have leave to withdraw, so that our parishes shall not become the poaching ground of everything which brings a kind word from some tender-hearted, but ill-informed indorser. Yet in all this I would see no authority, however much it might tend to general harmony and efficiency. It must be only a convenience for the time being ; itself, like everything else in our Lord's kingdom, worthless, save as subject to the one sole and supreme authority.

There is temptation always, in trying to organize the church more perfectly. Yet we may hope that God will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able, but will make a way to escape, so long as we love to retain him in our knowledge. The same is true of forms, liturgies, artistic effects in houses of worship, rites and ceremonies which are more or less scenic in their nature. We have no quarrel with them, save as they become rivals of that, compared with which they are nothing. They are worse than vanity, however pleasing in themselves, the moment they draw away our minds from the one Will which speaks on Sinai and Calvary.

Creeds, platforms, conventions, councils, may beget an external union of Christians. Artificial splendors, the ritual, the choir, the elevating of the host, and festive processions, may keep up an appearance of uniformity. But the only UNION, the only reverence for authority worthy of the name, is that which comes to pass when the souls of believers all bow, intelligently and each for itself, before Him whose is the glory and dominion and power and blessing. Let us preach free thought. Let us encourage the spirit of adventure in science, in letters, in the study and the criticism of the inspired books. But let us at the same time remember, if we would bring solid rest to the weary inquirer, and save men from the two extremes of skepticism and religious bondage, that we must hold up, and press home with all the might God has given us, those great and everlasting truths which revolve around the doctrine of Christ and him crucified. We shall have a true Protestantism, that form of it which came with the fathers from Scrooby and Leyden, and which suffered and triumphed at Plymouth, when the conviction of guilt, eternal judgment, and the need of faith in order to salvation shall pursue men into their daily business and their recreations ; when that conviction shall lift over them a force terrible to rebuke and all-powerful to approve ; a force, starting from the judgment-seat of conscience, which shall cheer them on with an angel's voice when they toil up the steeps of holiness ; but which, as often as they falter, shall point them with awful gesture to Him who sitteth upon His throne in the heavens, — whose eye, like a flame of fire, searcheth the heart and trieth the reins of the children of men, to give unto every one according to his works, whether they be good or bad.

J. M. MANNING.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES OF THE UNITED STATES, was established November 17, 1871. The several preliminary steps,—the proposal by the Pilgrim Memorial Convention, at Chicago, in April, 1870; the approval by the several State organizations, and their appointment of committees of conference, and the proceedings of the convention of those committees,—have already been put on record, in detail, in the Quarterly.¹ A preliminary committee of seven persons, appointed by that convention, were empowered, under instructions, to prepare a constitution, to select the time and place of meeting, and to issue the call. Without waiting to decide as to time and place, the committee early issued to the churches the letters-missive containing the subject-matter, that delegates might be seasonably appointed; and subsequently issued the supplementary call, to meet at Oberlin, Ohio, November 15, 1871. All the steps had been taken slowly and with the fullest discussion; the several State organizations had been almost perfectly unanimous; the convention of committees had been entirely unanimous in recognizing the voice of the churches; and the response to the call was general. The churches were represented, from Maine to California and Oregon, and from the Lakes to the Gulf. One who entered the church at Oberlin on that stormy morning, saw at once in the large and earnest gathering, that it was a thoroughly representative meeting. The council thus assembled was empowered by the accepted letters-missive, to organize a permanent association of the churches; and, on the third day, after full discussion and some few amendments, the constitution was unanimously and enthusiastically adopted.

At a glance, it is obvious that this is something of a departure from our old methods. It is a departure, however, only in reference to meetings of the churches. Four times in our history have the American churches met in general synods,—in 1637, in 1646, in 1852, and in 1865,—with important partial synods between 1646 and 1852. The theory has been, that national synods would be called only when some pressing exigency demanded it. By the voice of the churches, at Oberlin, it is decided to meet every third year, and oftener if necessity requires. To accomplish this, and also as a formal expression of unity, the churches have associated themselves. The constitution begins :—

The Congregational Churches of the United States, by elders and messengers assembled, do now associate themselves in National Council :

To express and foster their substantial unity in doctrine, polity, and work ; and

To consult upon the common interests of all the churches, their duties in the work of evangelization, the united development of their resources, and their relations to all parts of the kingdom of Christ.

An association is therefore formed. But it is not a body over the churches ; it is the churches themselves associating. Union in this association is not made a test of good standing. Its sessions will have no more, no less, power, than any of our former synods. Those synods were called, in exigencies, by letters-missive, specifying the particular and limited topics of discussion ; these sessions will be called by letters involving the above-named objects,—or, perhaps more accurately, the existence of the National Council effects its first-named object, and its sessions are for the second. Former synods dissolved without succession provided for ; the sessions of the Council are to be “stated.” But in all the essentials of the power of the local churches, or the composition of a synod by delegates chosen for that single session, or the proper province and powers of an assembled synod,—there is no change. A unanimous declaration by such a Council will doubtless have great force ; but it will be because it represents the general convictions of the churches, and appeals to reason.

That such an association of our churches is a new step in America, is true. But it is not new to Congregationalism. The English churches have had such a general union for many years. Our local conferences of churches, and our State associations of churches, involve precisely the same principle. In each, the churches meet stately “to consult upon the common interests” in their respective territories. We have now merely enlarged the practice of this principle, so that the churches of the whole country may consult upon the common interests of the whole body.

The departure from the "occasional" method of synods, is easily accounted for. With the increase of our denomination, and its spread over territory previously unoccupied by us, the duties of the Congregational churches, in home evangelization and foreign work, have become pressing,—so pressing, that three years can hardly elapse without necessitating new consultation. In this rapidly-growing and changing country, "exigencies" become constant. The churches must be prepared to meet them. Once in three years is none too often for them to review the methods and consider the energy of their Christian work. The time has passed when duty was fulfilled by suffering things to drift.

Nor is it to be overlooked, that the desire for a visible expression of unity has rapidly grown. That unity existed. The last twenty years has drawn the hearts of brethren more and more together. Early suspicions have vanished. Of all the utterances of the accomplished moderator at Oberlin, none was more significant than this: "We stand upon the grave of buried prejudices!" The distinction of "schools" in doctrine still exists; but it has come to be regarded with a spirit of mutual respect and Christian toleration. In the presence of new issues with disbelief, the old war-cries among ourselves have died into silence. We cannot afford, and we have not the heart, to fight each other. In church polity, many have wakened to the fact that the churches abandoned the ultra-independent theory so long ago as the time of John Cotton. The tenet of the fellowship of the churches co-existed with the tenet of the power of self-government in the local church; the twin tenets which this Quarterly, in its beginning, extricated from the half-dozen so-called "cardinal principles of Congregationalism" set forth in the books, expressed with plainness, and has made the doctrines of these volumes; tenets to which all our methods must conform. But while the power of self-government was firmly established, a horror of centralization had, until late years, prevented the due practical recognition of unity. That unity existed in our theories. Congregationalism is not a system of independent squads. The Cambridge Platform says: "A Congregational [i. e. a local] church is, by the institution of Christ, a part of the militant visible church." And: "So there may be acknowledged a universal visible church." Dr. Bacon says (Polity, 1865): "All the churches ought to preserve church communion one with another; because they are all united to Christ as integral parts of his one Catholic church-militant." That unity has come to be felt, else the Oberlin Council would have been impossible. Groping about for its recognition, the fathers made first, the State organizations, and next, the cumbersome system of an annual interchange of delegates between those several organizations. Had that system been faithfully carried out, as it once was in New England, it would have required, in the year 1871, seven hundred men to traverse the country, except as one delegate might be accredited to several associations, which was possible only in a very limited degree. Of course, this system became a failure, and we have had an imperfect expression of a unity for whose visible form Christian hearts were longing.

To the association of the churches, therefore, public sentiment has steadily moved. No number of men could have contrived this as a scheme, and foisted it upon the churches. It has come without effort. Doubtless the experience of the "Churches of the Northwest" in their triennial convention, prepared the way. The result is a formal and permanent declaration of the unity of the Congregational churches, in the form of a permanent association.

Members of some other Christian denominations seem to apprehend that this organization will lessen the liberty of the local churches. But against this is the explicit declaration in Council:—

They agree in belief that the right of government resides in local churches or congregations of believers, who are responsible directly to the Lord Jesus Christ, the one head of the church universal and of all particular churches; but that all churches, being in communion one with another as parts of Christ's Catholic church, have mutual duties subsisting in the obligations of fellowship.

The churches therefore, while establishing this National Council for the furtherance of the common interests and work of all the churches, do maintain the scriptural right of each church to self-government and administration; and this National Council shall never exercise legislative or judicial authority, nor consent to act as a Council of reference.

There is, therefore, no departure from the doctrine of the rights of local churches. Nor can there be in practice, if the theory of Congregationalism is rightly understood. Not only as applicable to this body, but to all bodies, to local Councils or organizations, there is this plain principle, viz., that in itself each church has entire control of its own affairs. No organization, no body of churches, can order or reverse a single act. No Council can replace an excommunicated member into the church excommunicating him. It can act at all, in such a case, only because his relation to the body of churches has been changed, and therefore it is a matter which concerns all. Mal-administration in a church cannot be overruled by sister churches; but, if the offending church becomes scandalous, the sister churches can admonish, and if that fails, can withdraw the fellowship which they had formerly extended, and which involves them in the scandalous character of such a church. We dwell upon this distinction, not only because it is of constant practical importance, but also because it defines the province of this National Council: (1.) The local church manages its own internal affairs without appeal, — the only apparent exceptions being cases whose official results affect the body of churches, and therefore are not exceptions. (2.) All matters of common concern are rightfully to be considered by the body of churches. An observance of this distinction makes our practice clear. Some persons think that some internal acts of a church are not valid without the official consent of a Council, — as the settlement of a pastor. This is a mistake. A church can settle a pastor over itself, by its own act. But it cannot put him into the fellowship of the ministers and churches by its own act; and that is done by a Council, which acts on this matter of "common concern," and also, but only by request of the church, advises as to his settlement.

Matters of "common concern," and those only, are therefore, to be considered by the body of churches. The "ecclesiastical Council" acts on the specific subject for which it is summoned. The local conference of churches considers all matters of "common concern" in its territory, but leaving specific acts like ordinations, to special Councils. The State Conference considers the general interests in its wider territory. And the National Council can consult only on the "common concern" of the body of churches as a whole. And that no local difference shall ever get before it, the churches have declared that it shall never act "as a Council of reference."

But it is distinctly understood, that, even in matters of "common concern," this Council cannot legislate. It cannot bind any church to accept its recommendations. The result of its consultations must have great moral force, but it is a force which consists in the fact of free consultations and deliberate conclusions. If unanimous, the decisions will carry themselves, because they are the decisions of the churches themselves. If not unanimous, they ought not to have weight. To enforce a recommendation by a legislative majority would be no gain. History tells us that an enforcement by a majority in the Presbyterian church once simply divided the church, and was not enforced, because the minority seceded. Advice seems just as good as legislation which cannot be enforced.

The relation of this body to the general voluntary societies, and to the mission societies, who have hitherto carried on the works of "common concern," is a delicate subject. Prior to the meeting at Oberlin, it excited no little discussion. It has always been remarkable that the Congregationalists, who pre-eminently insist on the local church power, should be the denomination in whose great mission work, the churches, as such, had not the slightest voice! Societies made up of individuals, voluntarily associating, have assumed the work, asked the churches for funds, and managed, without appeal, all details. But it is easily explained. At the time when the evangelizing work began, had individuals waited for the churches, it would never have been done. The societies have educated the churches up to the present point. There was also the advantage that persons voluntarily associating for a particular work, were persons whose hearts were in that work, and who would be far more likely to act with efficiency and energy, than a mere official board. Besides, the societies have always sought the approval of the State organizations, and they have necessarily been keenly alive to the public opinion which controls the purse.

At the same time, the rules, in some societies, by which any person can become a life member by paying a certain sum of money, are liable to put the control in the hands of a few persons. It would be next to impossible, except under some great popular impulse, to overturn any particular administration which was favored by the people where the office is located. The memorable conflict at New York, in the Tract Society, illustrates this. The locality can flood the meeting with its own residents. The system of the American Board, although it is a "close corporation," is far more accordant with Congregationalism, and far more representative. Two hundred members, chosen from all sections by apportionment, and unable to absent themselves long without forfeiting their membership, represent all parts of the country. The responsibility is specific and imperative. But, in most of the societies, it is impossible for the vast, scattered membership to know comparatively anything of the management of affairs.

The churches, if Congregationalism is correct, ought to attend to these matters of "common concern," i. e. the great work of evangelization in its several parts. Over corporations they have no control, but the work is their work. If the corporations assume the business, they are responsible to the churches. Practically, our societies have always admitted this responsibility. We venture to say that there is not one of the charitable societies which would not submit its affairs to the fullest investigation by a committee appointed by any organization of the churches. In fact, to refuse would be to commit suicide. Nor would they wish to refuse. Muttered complaints of mal-administration often need only to have the complainants and the officials brought face to face, and explanation removes the discontent.

How are the churches to attend to these "matters of common concern?"

The only allusion in the constitution is this:

Such Congregational General Societies for Christian work, and the Faculties of such Theological Seminaries, as may be recognized by this Council, may be represented by one delegate each, such representatives having the right of discussion only.

There is here only a hint. But we understand the modification to be practically this: On the one hand, the churches are not to ignore, as churches, the work which Christ has committed to their hands; but will regularly consult in council upon their duties, their responsibilities, their resources, and the methods and energy of what is being done. They must fulfil their responsibilities. On the other hand, the churches in council will not appoint any boards, but will leave the practical business in the hands of those societies, who have so long, so ably, and successfully carried on these affairs. The Council will be the exponent of public sentiment; the societies will exercise their best judgment in carrying the demands of that sentiment into practical effect. There is great advantage in this middle course; the Council will not be entangled in mere business details, nor with standing and powerful boards, whose steady tendency is to govern the body which elects them; and the societies have the moral strength of being recognized agents of the churches. It is useless, also, to disguise the fact that the community is not now satisfied by summary financial statements in annual reports, as it once was. It wants to know whether expenditures are judicious, and expenses economical. We know a committee which has been long attempting to "sort out" and group the items in the financial reports of some Union societies, and are as yet unable to ascertain the working expenses. The scandal in the Methodist Book Concern has affected societies generally. It would be a good thing for the societies, to submit their affairs annually to a thorough inspection by outside and impartial parties. We are confident that ours would stand the most thorough test. And to bring the churches and societies face to face, has an advantage abundantly shown at Oberlin, in the unanimous results on the future Home Missionary policy.

The doctrinal basis of union has excited no little comment. It is evident that this basis is somewhat different in form from any previously set forth. It is worth while to see what was done and what it meant.¹

The Preliminary Committee appointed to prepare a draft of Constitution were expressly instructed to insert a reference to the Plymouth Declaration of 1865, as the expression of faith. They reported the following paragraph :—

¹ We avail ourselves, in the consideration of this topic, of the substance of an article in the Congregationalist, by the same writer.

They [the churches] agree in belief that the Holy Scriptures are the sufficient and only rule of faith and practice ; their understanding of the doctrines thereof, and their harmony with other parts of the church universal, being sufficiently expressed in the declaration of faith set forth in National Council at Plymouth in the year 1865.

The declaration thus referred to consisted, mainly, of two parts, (1) a statement of our denominational doctrinal views, and (2), a statement of doctrine in which we are in harmony with other parts of the church. The first was specific, a re-affirmation "substantially" of our old confessions. The second embraced only the general doctrines of the church.

The first sentence of the paragraph reported at Oberlin received some verbal amendments. The second sentence met with decided criticism. Objection was made to a reference to a document not familiar, and which itself referred the reader back to two other documents,—an objection which had force. But the real objection found utterance in a motion to add the words "as follows," and then quote from the declaration of 1865, the section containing its second statement, viz.; our harmony with other parts of the church. But this would have taken a part as if it were the whole, and would have made the whole paragraph inconsistent in its parts. Various amendments were offered, and many others were waiting to be in order, when the particular session ended. On re-assembling, it was voted (on motion of the chairman of the preliminary committee which had reported the paragraph) to refer the report and proposed amendments to a special committee, who should also consider any and all proposals which any brother might lay before them. The composition of that committee, Professor Bartlett, Hon. Elisha Carpenter, Hon. C. J. Walker, Rev. Dr. Dwinell, and Rev. Dr. D. T. Fiske, was a guarantee of a judicious result. They reported the following substitute :—

They [the churches] agree in belief that the Holy Scriptures are the sufficient and only infallible rule of religious faith and practice ; their interpretation thereof being in substantial accordance with the great doctrines of the Christian faith commonly called evangelical, held in our churches from early times, and sufficiently set forth by former general Councils.

And this statement was at once and unanimously adopted.

That this literally sets aside our old Confessions, is not apparent. It says that "our interpretation" is in "substantial accordance with the great doctrines of the Christian faith commonly called evangelical"; but this we have always said. The statement is not a creed; it merely indicates a position. It can easily be received as meaning only, that our "interpretation" is not limited by the "evangelical" faith, but merely accords with it, and may go beyond it. It is to be remembered that this article does not purpose to define fully the faith of the churches, but the basis of union. It is explanatory of the first sentence; viz., that the churches associate themselves in National Council. And, as to the basis of union, we believe that the honest intent of the vote by the Council was to make this union rest on the common evangelical faith, and not on any of the (minor) peculiarities which have distinguished us, as a whole, from other parts of the church catholic. And it implies a re-affirmation of what has been "set forth by former general councils," so far as they declare the common evangelical doctrines. We supposed that the phrase "in substantial accordance with," meant that the common evangelical faith and this basis of union were substantially one. If so, it is really a declaration of adherence to the historic faith of the church of Christ, as being a sufficient basis of denominational unity.*

This does not alter the faith of any church. Every one will hold the evangelical doctrines in its own preferred cast. It does not mean a compromise which is to omit everything to which any individual Christian objects. The evangelical doctrines are perfectly well defined. But the denomination declines to commit itself to the defence of any man's peculiarities, —

* It is only right to state that an article by the learned chairman of the committee which reported this amendment, states that the intent of the committee was that the "interpretation" is "in accordance with," "that is, conformed to, moulded and governed by — the evangelical doctrines." He does not regard the intent of the vote to be what we do. We looked rather to the distinction between an exhaustive statement of views held by our churches, and a statement of faith sufficient for this practical union; and that, not the former, but the latter, was intended. As an exhaustive statement, many members would have steadily opposed it. As a basis of union, they were willing to concede it. And the moderator of the Council has expressed opinions agreeing with the sentiment of this article.

Edwards, Hopkins, Emmons, Taylor, Tyler, or anybody else ; or to the defence of any particular Confession as against any other great Confession. Variations from the well-known common faith of the Christian church, are left to their own adherents.

This is a broad, catholic basis. We do not bind ourselves by any provincial creeds or teachers. All the great Confessions are in substantial accord as to essentials. In fact, the "Heads of Agreement" put the doctrinal part of the Articles of the Church of England, the Westminster, and the Savoy, as equally satisfactory. Cotton Mather says our churches "took all the occasions imaginable to make all the world know, that in the doctrinal part of religion they have agreed entirely with the Reformed Churches of Europe. And that they desired most particularly to maintain the faith professed by the churches of Old England." This catholic basis is therefore no novelty. Instead of throwing away the substance of any Confession, we really recognize the essential faith of the Christian church which is in all Confessions. We refuse to be a sect, and we are loyal to the common faith.

This is a great step, therefore, towards Christian union. It tells all Christian people that we will not make our peculiarities a bar to the union of the separated parts of Christ's divided church. We can welcome union on the simple basis of the common faith. Whatever the immediate result may be, an act like this of a powerful denomination must eventually bear fruit, and in the mean time we have the satisfaction of knowing that our churches have done the right thing for Christian union.

It removes difficulties in the way of evangelization. Probably many of us little understand how our laborers have been pelted with hard phrases out of the old Confessions, and especially in localities where union is indispensable to make one efficient church. True, our denomination has never done more than to accept, for substance, any Confession ; but that awkward word "substantially," is a very hard word to make people understand, particularly if they do not want to understand it. Doubtless a man, in any church of any denomination, who accepts literally, just as a plain man would understand it, every-phrase in the Westminster, would be a rare specimen. The churches have never proposed to do it. They have never, in any synod, imposed a creed on any man's conscience. But every troubler has felt at liberty to insist that our laborers shall defend every sentence of Confessions which were never adopted by sentences. For ourselves, we can continue to believe and teach that "no mere man since the fall is able in this life perfectly to keep the commandments of God,"—and to hold to this "substantially," that is, just as it means. But we are not at liberty to insist that all persons in fellowship shall hold to this real inability, which the Confession makes "utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all good." A real inability and a "moral" inability are not causes of division, while the necessity of the work of the Holy Ghost is held by all.

As a matter of fact, we had come to this years ago. We believe that our rapidly-increasing Missouri churches are practically organized on the "common" section of the Declaration of 1865. We think that our Southern work is on the same basis. That is, we organize Christian churches on the old Congregational theory that the Christians of any locality should form the church of that locality. The new Kentucky churches were represented at Oberlin, and are Congregational in form, purely "Christian" in doctrine. As to "Old School" and "New School," this distinction was not at issue in the Oberlin Council; as obsolete, so far as fellowship is concerned, as it is in the Presbyterian church. The distinction was a different one; whether special Confessions of Faith should be re-affirmed as a basis of union, in such parts as distinguish them from the historic faith of the Christian church. The churches in Council decided to say, what they have been steadily doing.

Possibly some may fear that this basis is too broad for safety. If they do, we can look at the intent of the words "former general Councils." What did they consider to be the common evangelical faith? The Council of 1865 was one of the "former General Councils." What it says of the "common faith" is therefore pertinent. We quote it:

With them we confess our faith in God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, the only living and true God; in Jesus Christ, the incarnate

Word, who is exalted to be our Redeemer and King; and in the Holy Comforter, who is present in the church to regenerate and sanctify the soul.

With the whole church, we confess the common sinfulness and ruin of our race, and acknowledge that it is only through the work accomplished by the life and expiatory death of Christ that believers in him are justified before God, receive the remission of sins, and through the presence and grace of the Holy Comforter, are delivered from the power of sin, and perfected in holiness.

We believe, also, in the organized and visible church, in the ministry of the Word, in the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper; in the resurrection of the body, and in the final judgment, the issues of which are eternal life and everlasting punishment.

We receive these truths on the testimony of God, given through prophets and apostles, and in the life, the miracles, the death, the resurrection, of His Son, our divine Redeemer,—a testimony preserved for the church in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, whch were composed by holy men as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

For ourselves, we believe the basis is at once broad, safe, and prophetic of great good to the work of the Master. * If it opens the door to all manner of crude notions, as some intimate, we fail to see it. It by no means intimates that our churches have no peculiarities. The distinction is still clear between an exhaustive statement of all our doctrinal views, and a statement of what we regard as a sufficient basis of union. As to ourselves, it does not say that the Declaration of 1865 was not a correct representation. It does not leave us without Confessions, nor as admitting a vague and indefinable sentiment of an "Evangelical" residuum which appears after taking out all that any one objects to. The faith of the Christian church is a perfectly well-defined faith, from which heresies have been rejected. And we prefer, as a basis of union, the catholic faith, not modified by provincialism.

It was in the line of catholicity that the Council set forth too

* The recent action of Rev. Mr. Hepworth is significant. At the meeting of New York Congregationalists, at which Mr. Hepworth was welcomed by Mr. Beecher, Dr. Budington, Dr. Storrs, and others, Dr. Budington was moderator, as he was of the Oberlin Council. Mr. Hepworth said: "All at once I said, 'O Christ, now the door is wide open; I think I see it all. I will pray to thee, I will try to be thine own; I will consecrate myself to Thee.' Then, as unto Jesus, even so angels came and ministered unto poor me. There seemed to be a break in the cloud of my life, and I heard a sweet voice say, 'It is all right now,' and I felt right. And, now all I can say to you, is, that I stand with you upon the 'Burial Hill Confession.'" the paper on the unity of the church, to accompany its constitution.

We have now noticed what may be considered organic in this new organization. We have but little space in which to notice the specific acts which are in the line of its "consultations."

Chief, were the recognition of the several benevolent societies. Papers upon the several parts of the work, which had been prepared by request of the preliminary committee, were read, and referred to committees. Upon the reports of those committees, and after full discussion, action was taken. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions was, of course, indorsed, and its adoption of the work in papal countries, as well as the revived work of women, specially commended. Also, the American Home Missionary Society, on whose methods there was a full debate in committee, and an unanimous result; and a recommendation that half a million dollars be annually secured, and a committee of conference with the society be appointed. The American Congregational Union, with an estimate of $100,000 annually; the American Missionary Association, with an estimate of $400,000 annually; the Society for the Promotion of Collegiate and Theological Education at the West; the American Education Society; the American Congregational Association, in its specialty of erecting a Congregational House; and, not least important, the Congregational Publishing Society, — were severally recognized and commended to the churches in their respective work. A committee was also appointed to consult with societies as to any possible consolidation; and, until 1874, to consider any new objects which may apply for aid, and inform the churches of their judgment.

The theological seminaries at Bangor, Andover, Yale, Hartford, Oberlin, Chicago, and Oakland, were recognized as "proper constituencies of this body," and were commended to the benefactions of the churches; Oberlin, Chicago, and the Pacific, being particularly mentioned as needing $100,000 each. The young institutions connected with Howard, Atlanta, and Straight Universities, were also kindly noticed, and recommended to the sympathies of the churches. The whole subject of ministerial education, and of the supply of ministers, received careful attention. Among other suggestions, was one that those in charge of the seminaries would meet to confer, and that they be requested to pay particular attention to the subject of the "Special Course" of study.

Ecclesiastically, it was suggested that the interchange of delegates between the several State organizations was now needless ; and delegates were appointed to other national Congregational bodies of churches, and to all the evangelical denominations to which there was any hope that it would be welcome. The "Polity" committee of 1865 was urged to complete its work ; and a committee was appointed to examine a brief Manual in preparation by the Publishing Society. An important recommendation was also this :—

Resolved, That all ministers in our denomination ought to be in orderly connection with some ministerial or ecclesiastical organization which shall be able to certify to their regular standing in the ministry.

Resolved, That the churches be urged not to employ unsettled ministers as preachers without such evidence of their good standing in the ministry.

Of a different class of topics, were these : resolutions on Temperance, referring to the Provisional Committee the propriety of petitioning congress ; resolutions as to the Sabbath ; a memorial to congress to print a larger edition of the executive document relating to the work of Dr. Whitman, in Oregon, of which only a few hundred were printed, while many thousands of a flagrantly unjust document had been issued ; an approval of the government's policy towards the Indians ; congratulations on the treaty of Washington, with a memorial to congress in favor of a system of international arbitration : a recommendation that the last Thursday in January be uniformly set apart as the day of prayer for colleges ; approval of an annual compilation of the statistics of the ministers and churches ; and the appointment of a committee to issue an address to the churches expressing "the great need of seeking the blessing of the Holy Ghost upon the ministers and churches for the success of the work of the gospel in the salvation of souls."

Among the acts of the Council, nothing was more significant than its assisting in laying the corner-stone of the building for the theological school at Oberlin. The few and beautifully simple ceremonies, and the address in the church, were wonderfully impressive. The act itself was significant, as being not only an act of preparation for educating ministers of the word of God, but also as expressive of that unity of faith and practice into which the churches have grown. Appropriately, the building is to be named Council Hall.

This notice of the new organization would greatly lack, if it did not refer to the deep religious feeling continually evident. In addition to the usual devotional exercises, every day was commenced with a prayer meeting, and one evening was entirely devoted to such a purpose. The presence and words of that venerable servant of God, Charles G. Finney, were a power for good. The religious tone of the whole community at Oberlin, which added a charm to its unbounded hospitalities, evidently favored the spirituality of all the sessions. To this spirit in the Council, it was doubtless due that brotherly harmony was perfect even in the most liberal discussions, and that the Council appeared to be a body of men not merely transacting business, but powerfully impressed with the conviction that the sole object was to consult upon the proper ways of doing the will of Christ in advancing his kingdom, and was unanimous in its decisions.

We append the Constitution, Declaration of Unity, and By-Laws.

THE CONSTITUTION.

THE Congregational churches of the United States, by elders and messengers assembled, do now associate themselves in National Council:

To express and foster their substantial unity in doctrine, polity, and work: and

To consult upon the common interests of all the churches, their duties in the work of evangelization, the united development of their resources, and their relations to all parts of the kingdom of Christ.

They agree in belief that the Holy Scriptures are the sufficient and only infallible rule of religious faith and practice; their interpretation thereof being in substantial accordance with the great doctrines of the Christian faith, commonly called evangelical, held in our churches from the early times, and sufficiently set forth by former General Councils.

They agree in belief that the right of government resides in local churches, or congregations of believers, who are responsible directly to the Lord Jesus Christ, the One Head of the church universal and of all particular churches ; but that all churches, being in communion one with another as parts of Christ's catholic church, have mutual duties subsisting in the obligations of fellowship.

The churches, therefore, while establishing this National Council for the furtherance of the common interests and work of all the churches, do maintain the Scriptural and inalienable right of each church to self-government and administration ; and this National Council shall never exercise legislative or judicial authority, nor consent to act as a council of reference.

And for the convenience of orderly consultation, they establish the following Rules : —

I. Sessions. — The churches will meet in National Council every third year. They shall also be convened in special sessions whenever any five of the general State organizations shall so request.

II. Representation. — The churches shall be represented, at each session, by delegates, either ministers or laymen, appointed in number and manner as follows : —

1. The churches, assembled in their local organizations, appoint one delegate for every ten churches in their respective organizations, and one for a fraction of ten greater than one half, it being understood that wherever the churches of any State are directly united in a general organization, they may, at their option, appoint the delegates in such body, instead of in local organizations, but in the above ratio of churches so united.

2. In addition to the above, the churches united in State organization appoint by such body one delegate, and one for each ten thousand communicants in their fellowship, and one for a major fraction thereof : —

3. It being recommended that the number of delegates be, in all cases, divided between ministers and laymen, as nearly equally as is practicable.

4. Such Congregational general societies for Christian work, and the faculties of such theological seminaries, as may be recognized by this Council, may be represented by one delegate each, such representatives having the right of discussion only.

III. Officers. — I. At the beginning of every stated or special session, there shall be chosen by ballot, from those present as members, a moderator, and one or more assistant moderators, to preside over its deliberations.

2. At each triennial session, there shall be chosen by ballot a secretary, a registrar, and a treasurer, to serve from the close of such session to the close of the next triennial session.

3. The secretary shall receive communications for the Council, conduct correspondence, and collect such facts, and superintend such publications, as may from time to time be ordered.

4. The registrar shall make and preserve the records of the proceedings of the Council ; and for his aid, one or more assistants shall be chosen at each session, to serve during such session.

5. The treasurer shall do the work ordinarily belonging to such office.
6. At each triennial session, there shall be chosen a provisional committee, who shall make needful arrangements for the next triennial session, and for any session called during the interval.
7. Committees shall be appointed, and in such manner, as may from time to time be ordered.
8. Any member of a church in fellowship may be chosen to the office of secretary, registrar, or treasurer ; and such officers as are not delegates shall have all the privileges of members, except that of voting.

IV. By-Laws.—The Council may make and alter By-laws at any triennial session.

V. Amendments.—This constitution shall not be altered or amended, except at a triennial session, and by a two thirds vote, notice thereof having been given at a previous triennial session, or the proposed alteration having been requested by some general State organization of churches, and published with the notification of the session.

DECLARATION OF THE UNITY OF THE CHURCH.

The members of the National Council, representing the Congregational churches of the United States, avail themselves of this opportunity to renew their previous declarations of faith in the unity of the church of God.

While affirming the liberty of our churches, as taught in the New Testament, and inherited by us from our fathers, and from martyrs and confessors of foregoing ages, we adhere to this liberty all the more as affording the ground and hope of a more visible unity in time to come. We desire and purpose to coöperate with all the churches of our Lord Jesus Christ.

In the expression of the same catholic sentiments solemnly avowed by the Council of 1865, on the Burial Hill at Plymouth, we wish, at this new epoch of our history, to remove, so far as in us lies, all causes of suspicion and alienation, and to promote the growing unity of counsel and of effort among the followers of Christ. To us, as to our brethren, “There is one body and one spirit, even as we are called in one hope of our calling.”

As little as did our fathers in their day, do we in ours, make a pretension to be the only churches of Christ. We find ourselves consulting and acting together under the distinctive name of Congregationalists, because, in the present condition of our common Christianity, we have felt ourselves called to ascertain and do our own appropriate part of the work of Christ’s church among men.

We especially desire, in prosecuting the common work of evangelizing our own land and the world, to observe the common and sacred law, that in the wide field of the world’s evangelization, we do our work in friendly coöperation with all those who love and serve our common Lord.

We believe in "the holy catholic church." It is our prayer and endeavor, that the unity of the church may be more and more apparent, and that the prayer of our Lord for his disciples may be speedily and completely answered, and all be one; that by consequence of this Christian unity in love, the world may believe in Christ as sent of the Father to save the world.

BY-LAWS.

The rules of order shall be those found in common parliamentary use, not modified by local legislative practice, with the following explicit modifications : —

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received except the following, namely ; to amend, to commit, to postpone to a time certain, to postpone indefinitely, to lay on the table, and to adjourn, — which shall have precedence in the reverse order of this list, — the motions to lay on the table and to adjourn, alone, being not debatable.

No member shall speak more than twice to the merits of any question in debate, except by special permission of the body ; nor more than once until every member desiring to speak shall have spoken.

CONGREGATIONAL NECROLOGY.

WILLIAM CHOATE died at Derry, N. H., on the 7th of October 1870, in the 86th year of his age. He was born in Essex, Mass., April 18, 1785. He was a descendant in the fifth generation from Sergeant John Choate, who came from England in 1645. The genealogy is as follows: John Choate, born in 1624, and settled in this country in the parish of Ipswich, Mass., known as Chebacco parish, and bought land on Hog Island. He died December 4, 1695. Thomas born in 1671, settled on Hog Island, which belonged to Chebacco parish. He owned the chief portion of the island, and was familiarly known as Governor Choate. Died March 3, 1745. Francis, born September 13, 1701. Died October 15, 1777. William, born in September, 1730. Died April 23, 1785. William 2d, born August 3, 1759. Died January 4, 1835. William 3d, the subject of the present sketch.

The farm on Hog Island remains in the possession of the family, being now owned by Dea. David Choate, of Essex, brother of the late Hon. Rufus Choate, whose father, David, was the brother of William 2d. The parents of William Choate 3d, removed to Londonderry, N. H., soon after his birth. At the age of twenty years, following the example of his father and of his grandfather, William 3d devoted himself to a sea-faring life. His father was opposed to his becoming a sailor, and to deter him from it, told him that he would claim his wages until he was twenty-one years of age. But leaving the paternal roof, with his personal effects in a bundle under his arm, he walked to Newburyport, Mass., and obtained for himself a situation "before the mast," on the merchant ship "Reward." When at the end of three years he returned to his father's house, he brought his earnings in coin, and while in conversation with his father, tossed the treasure on the table, and said: "There, father, are my wages." The tender-hearted parent walked to the window and wiped away his tears, but took none of the money.

He remained on board of that vessel until he became commander of her, sailing to the Mediterranean and the Baltic seas.

In the war of 1812, fearing that his ship would be captured, he made sale of her at Amelia Island, and took passage for the coast of Florida in a French vessel. His fears were not without foundation, for soon after, the "Reward" was taken by a British privateer and burned. Thus ended his career on the ocean. But never did his love for the sea cease, and he always took special delight in David's vivid delineation in the 107th Psalm, and in those portions of Scripture which describe Paul's voyages on the Mediterranean.

When in England, he was once summoned as a witness at a court over which Lord Ellenborough presided. To the various inquiries of his lordship he answered simply, "Yes, sir," "No, sir." As the term "Sir" in England is thus used in addressing an inferior, a lawyer engaged in the case became excited, and indignantly asked, "What country were you born in, that you presume to answer his lordship 'Yes, sir,' and 'No, sir?'" Mr. Choate, nearly six feet in height, with a physique of 180 avoirdupois, an eye black as a coal and sparkling as a fixed star, and a voice clear as a silver trumpet, turned upon the attorney and said, "I was born in a country where there is but one Lord, and that is the Lord in the heavens." The scene was too much for the gravity of Lord Ellenborough, and he shook with laughter until the powder from his wig gave a gray tinge to his judicial robe.

Returning to Londonderry, Mr. Choate engaged for many years in mercantile pursuits, and afterwards, besides conducting the work on a farm, devoted himself to public affairs. He represented the old town of Londonderry two years in the legislature, and the town of Derry, after the division, two years. He was one of the selectmen of Londonderry two years, and of Derry one. He had remarkable powers as a presiding officer, and was elected moderator of the town meeting four years in Londonderry, and fifteen in Derry. He held this office fourteen years in succession. In the most exciting scenes he never lost control of the assembly. When the question arose as to the division of the town, in the midst of an angry debate, at midnight, suddenly every light in the house was extinguished. He was presiding on the occasion, and above the uproar the clarion notes of his voice were heard ordering every man to keep his seat until the lamps should be relighted, and every man obeyed.

When he was teaching a school, a parent came in and angrily called him to account for "whipping his boy." Capt. Choate, as he was familiarly called, ordered the man to take a seat, and so commanding was his air, that the man was overawed, and took a seat. Mr. Choate then put a book in his hand and kept him there to the close of the school hours, and then said to him, "The next time you come to school bring your own book."

For five years he was a director of the Derry Bank. For forty-three years he was a trustee of the Pinkerton Academy, continuing in office until his death. For sixteen years he was treasurer of that institution.

After his decease the trustees entered a minute upon their records in which they say, "Mr. Choate, from its origin, was deeply interested in the prosperity of the institution. He, with another, joint owner with himself, gave the valuable landed property now held by the board, and on which the academy building stands. But his interest in, and his efforts for, the welfare of the academy ceased not with this donation. Always, to the very last, he was its firm and zealous friend, ready to lend his time and labor and influence for its good. As a trustee, he was earnest, faithful, persevering; as treasurer, true to the pecuniary interests of the academy, wise and prudent in his suggestions for the management of its property."

Mr. Choate married Mary Burnett Pinkerton, daughter of Elder James Pinkerton, of Derry, Dec. 28, 1815, who, after nearly fifty-five years of married life, still survives him. Four of their children have died; two daughters remain,—one, the wife of Rev. Christopher Cushing, of Boston. Mr. Choate, his wife, and three daughters made a public profession of their faith in Christ, and united with the First Congregational Church in Derry, on the same day, March 4, 1838. In disposition, Mr. Choate was kind, indulgent and generous. During the last few years of his life his mental powers failed, and in his last days, when he did not recognize even the members of his own family, he gave a striking illustration of the force of early habits, and the permanent influence of early associations; for although it was nearly sixty years since he had been a commander on the sea, and over twenty years since he had acted as a presiding officer, yet again and again on his death-bed he would order the sailors to "fix the rope." Or fancying an assembly before him he would say, "Those who are in favor of the motion will vote yea. Those opposed, vote nay."

The introduction of the subject of religion would sometimes call back his waning powers, and in lucid moments his voice was heard in prayer.

C. C.

THE REV. SETH SHALE RARNOLD died at Ascutneyville, Vt., April, 3, 1871, in his eighty-fourth year. He was born in Westminster, Vt. Feb. 22, 1788, and was the son of Seth and Esther (Ranney) Arnold. His early life was spent on the farm and at the work of a tanner, the craft of his father. While a youth, and before he indulged a hope that he was a Christian, he often expressed his preference for the ministry as his life-work. This preference was encouraged by his parents, and was, doubtless, a leading influence that suggested the subject of a liberal education to his mind. He prepared for college, mostly, under the instruction of his pastor, the Rev. Sylvester Sage. He was graduated at Middlebury College in 1812. While in college he became personally interested in religion. The year after his graduation he taught a select school in Bladensburg, Md., with the exception of the months of July and August, 1813, during which time he was first sergeant of company of volunteers for the defence of Annapolis against British troops. While teaching at Bladensburg, he commenced the study of theology with the Rev. J. Breckenridge, of Washington, D. C.

Returning to Westminster, Vt., February, 1814, he continued his studies with the Rev. Sylvester Sage, by whom he was presented to the Windham Association, for licensure, 27 Sept., 1814.

He spent most of the following winter preaching in Massachusetts. The first Sabbath in May, 1815, he commenced preaching in Alstead, N. H., and was ordained the pastor of the Congregational church in that place 17 June, 1816, which relation continued until 23 April, 1834. His pastorate in Alstead, of eighteen years, was greatly blessed in its general influence, and in three powerful revivals of religion, in 1816, 1819, and 1826, which increased greatly the numbers and influence of the church, and improved very much the moral and civil character of the town. His labors, during this time, were not confined to his own church ; he was intimately connected with all of the benevolent and religious movements in the State ; was one of the directors of the Home Missionary Society, and often engaged in missionary work in the feeble churches in his vicinity.

After leaving Alstead, he spent two years as a supply for the Congregational church in Gilsom, N. H., and was the means of introducing to them a permanent pastor. In 1836, he removed to Westminster, his native town, partly on account of his own health, and partly on account of the need of his aged father, now approaching his hundredth year, of some one to care for him and take charge of the large farm, which he had managed alone until over ninety years of age. While in Westminster, in charge of the affairs of the homestead, he preached as the wants of the churches in the region called him. Two years he supplied the church in Walpole, N. H., and about the same length of time the church in Westminster. A powerful revival of religion attended his labors in Westminster, and fifty-five were added to the church. To both of these churches, as also the church in Gilsom, he was the means of introducing a permanent pastor. Being himself unable to take the charge of a parish, as a settled pastor, he would not act as a supply, after a minister was found that the church would call as a pastor. The terms, "stated supply," and "acting pastor," meant, simply, occasional supply, an "interregnum" in a church's history; a state of things that should not, unless in very exceptional cases, be tolerated year after year by a church, or encouraged by a minister. After the death of his father, who reached his one hundred and third year, he was more permanently employed as a minister in Halifax, Vt., four years, from 10 Oct., 1852, to 30 March, 1856; in Roxbury, N. H., two years; in West Townshend, Vt., six years, from June, 1858, to June, 1864. Being now seventy-five years of age, he retired from the ministry, and took up his residence in Ascutneyville, Vt. Here, until a few months before his death, he was an active worker in the cause of Christ, in the Sabbath school, the prayer meeting, and visiting from house to house; occasionally assisting in the public services of the sanctuary. In his Sabbath-school class of young men, numbering from fifteen to twenty, he was greatly blessed. A large number of the class indulged hope of pardoned sin while under his instruction.

As a preacher, Mr. Arnold was instructive rather than sensational. His sermons were always prepared with care, in language simple, such as his hearers would easily understand. For that reason, "the common people always heard him gladly."

As a man, he was of noble form, erect, and dignified in all his actions, courteous in his treatment of all men, a lover of hospitality, prudent of speech, a wise counsellor, a true friend; in all respects a Christian gentleman, and ministerial in all his habits. He was always recognized as a minister. He had no eccentricities to attract notice and make him known. To be known as a faithful minister of the gospel, was all the repute he sought. As such he was known, and is remembered in many places in Vermont and New Hampshire.

Mr. Arnold married Miss Ann House, of Andover, Conn., Jan. 22, 1817. She died Feb. 3, 1841. They had four children.

He also married Mrs. Mary (Davis) Grout, of Acworth, N. H., Nov. 8, 1844. She died May 22, 1847; and he married Mrs. Naomi (Jones) Hitchcock, of Claremont, Mass., Dec. 26, 1854, who survives him.

Mrs. CATHARINE (VERNON) MANN, wife of Rev. Joel Mann, was born in Newport, R. I., July 11, 1787, and died in New Haven, Conn., May 20, 1871. Her parents were Samuel Vernon and Elizabeth Almy (Ellery) Vernon. Her father was a merchant engaged in foreign commerce, and for many years, to the day of his death, was president of the Newport Bank. The family mansion, "elaborately finished," says a writer, is now in good preservation, and was made the headquarters of Count de Rochambeau, admiral of the French fleet which came to our country's aid in the war of the Revolution. There also General Washington was received and made it his headquarters during his residence in Rhode Island in the time of that war. It was owned and occupied by the Hon. William Vernon, the grandfather of the subject of this obituary memorial. He was president of the United States navy board at Boston through that contest for national independence. "His energies," says the same writer, "were directed to the formation of a navy that should battle with the enemy on the ocean, — a gigantic undertaking for that day. He brought his extensive knowledge of mercantile and marine affairs to the aid of the government; and to his unflinching devotion to liberty, personal sacrifices and extraordinary exertions, America, under Providence, owes much of her success upon the sea. His services for years were given to the country without charge."

The Hon. William Ellery, who was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, was great-uncle of the subject of this sketch.

Moving from early youth in those social circles in which there was much refinement, Mrs. Mann was an accomplished woman, courteous and kind, large-hearted and benevolent. She was prudent in speech, and eminently discreet in action. Her warm affection and blameless deportment secured cordial friends wherever she resided.

Having experienced the grace of God in a time of religious declension when it was rare for young persons to become members of a church, she made a public profession of her faith and united with what was then the second Congregational church in Newport, of which Rev. William Patton, D.D., was pastor. Ever after she was an exemplary Christian, exhibiting the graces of the Spirit in feeling and action. Her love to Christ and reliance on him excluded doubts and fears. Her conscientious regularity in private prayer showed that her fellowship was with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ. When trials and bereavements threw dark shadows over her path, divine grace enabled her to exercise patience and submission. The Father of mercies, ever mindful of his children, gave to her soul sweet consolation.

She was married May 12, 1816. As a wife she was provident, faithful, and loving; as a mother, devoted to the welfare and salvation of her children; as a Sabbath school teacher, she was ever solicitous and prayerful for the conversion of those who were favored with her instructions. Many of them were led by her to Christ in the exercise of saving faith.

Her journal is the record of precious experiences which shined out in mild and attractive lustre in daily practice. In the earlier portion of her life, before the cares and duties of a mother and of the wife of a pastor engrossed her attention, she indulged her fondness for reading, and particularly her taste for good poetry. Her own pen has left many poetic effusions emanating from a warm and affectionate heart even in old age.

An acquaintance travelling in Europe and hearing of her decease while among the Alps, wrote thus : "It is some consolation that she lived to a good old age, and that she retained all her brilliant faculties, and the power to express her feelings in such beautiful verse to the very last." Truly she has left a fragrant memory. In all the churches and congregations in which she resided as co-laborer with her husband in the great work of the Christian ministry, for more than fifty years, her worth has been appreciated, and she has had a large share in the affections of the people. Of her seven children, only one survives, — Frederick Barter Mann, who is a practising physician in Brooklyn, N. Y.

The disease which terminated her useful life attacked her in usual health, and did its fatal work in three days. The extreme difficulty of breathing almost precluded speech; but we needed not a last testimony of her love to Christ, and her experience of the riches of his grace.

Deacon BENJAMIN LYMAN, son of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Collins) Lyman, was born in Columbia (then Lebanon Crank), Conn., Oct. 30, 1781. He died in Columbia, Oct. 12, 1871, aged ninety. The place of his death, where he resided from the time of his marriage, June 9, 1803, sixty-eight years, is but a few rods from the place of his birth. His wife, Lydia, who died April 15, 1862, was the daughter of Dea. Samuel Barstow, who died in Columbia, Feb. 27, 1846, at the age of eighty-six, having held the office of deacon of the Congregational church forty-five years. Dea. Lyman united with the Congregational church, Columbia, in the year 1809, and was chosen deacon in 1813, which office he held for fifty-eight years.

He was instrumental in the organization of the Sabbath school, June, 1820, in connection with Rev. Alfred Wright, afterwards missionary for thirty-three years among the Choctaws, who was born in Columbia, March 1, 1788, and died in his field of labor, March 31, 1853. Dea. Lyman was the first superintendent of the school, which position he continued to hold for fourteen years. He then, for many years, had charge of a large Bible class, and retained a very deep interest in the school till the latest years of his life.

He held the position of chorister for about thirty years, throwing an energy, with accuracy of rendering, into the service of song, in those days seldom surpassed. As a teacher of sacred music, his services were sought by other towns as well as his own. He was, not unfrequently called upon to officiate at funerals by prayer and a few words of consolation or practical instruction. For many years, half a century ago and afterwards, he would often be found in neighboring towns in times of revivals and protracted meetings, entering into the work with his whole heart, and giving efficient aid in seeking the salvation of precious souls. With just the same earnestness he entered into the temperance reform in its earliest stages, and fully kept pace with its steps of progress. On an Independence day, he came before the people with an impressive and well-written temperance address, and often was his voice heard in advocacy of this good cause. He was also one of the quickest to take up the cause of the slave when the name anti-slavery was a different burden from what it was ten years ago.

He was a man of marked characteristics, of strong convictions, and ever ready to act up to them ; of great firmness in the faith, of ardent devotion to the interests of the kingdom of Christ, and of earnest zeal in the work of winning souls.

His last ten years were chiefly spent in the seclusion of his home, under the increasing burdens and infirmities of extreme old age. With but little power of connected thought or of intelligible conversation for months and years, yet the name of Jesus he loved to hear and to speak ; the broken song of gratitude and praise would often come to his lips ; the home-rest was in sweet anticipation, as among his last words came distinctly to the listening ear, "I am going home."

In his family he seemed a very patriarch, walking in the ways of the Lord and in the ordinances of the gospel, and "commanding his household after him." His children, — an unbroken band of five sons and four daughters, — were all present to unite in the last filial duty of mingled sadness and glorious hope. They, with their children and grandchildren, rise up to call him blessed. They praise God for that Christian home, for that domestic altar, for those cherished prayers and divine songs. Here was furnished a happy and successful exhibition of filial reverence and devotion, inspired by an unwavering, faithful Christian discipline.

LITERARY REVIEW.

THEOLOGICAL AND RELIGIOUS.

WE sometimes think there are too many books on "The Evidences," technically so called. To many minds a defence, or a proof, is significant of a weakness which demands such treatment; while to others, "Evidences," through some mental obliquity, or by some faulty presentation, only increase doubts. "Evidences" may bear the same relation to Christianity that commentaries do to the Bible; they may, when well done, explain, or they may, as too often, befog and confuse. Men like to doubt, to differ, to argue; some honestly, through love of truth and a desire to understand it; some because they hold it to be intellectual weakness to believe anything without subjecting it to the most rigid tests; others from a predetermination to reject a proposition, regardless of evidence. In religious matters, this doubting is often carried to a ridiculous extent, and evidences and testimonies which on other subjects would be quickly accepted as sufficient, are here discarded. Credulity toward all scientific assumptions, incredulity toward all spiritual propositions, mark the two extreme points of the mental arc. If the same hasty generalization and acceptance of imperfectly-tested principles and results which so conspicuously distinguish the scientific studies of the present day were applied to religious truths, there would be little call for "Evidences," little scepticism, and a general adoption of the fundamentals of Christianity.

Christianity however owes very much to scepticism. A succession of vigorous assaults by those who have doubted or disbelieved, has added greatly to the strength of its position. The word of God itself would doubtless become to many a dead letter, at least in a great degree, were it not for the vitalizing effect of perpetual discussion as to its meaning and authority. At each new onslaught, unbelief, partly perhaps from self-delusion, and partly from mere policy, has raised the cry that the Christian revelation had been, or was about to be, swept away entirely. But somehow, when the smoke and dust of the assault has cleared up, there the citadel has stood unharmed, with greater assurance than ever in the minds of the defenders that it is, indeed, impregnable.

The positivism of Comte is already widely admitted to be a failure, even by those who sympathize with the spirit of its author. Scientific materialism, so-called,—speculative materialism would be a more truthful name,—is also giving signs of weakness, and is faltering under the sturdy blows which it is receiving on all sides. The most eminent scientific men abjure it; and the unphilosophical ill-temper of Huxley, and some others, shows clearly that they are by no means sure that they tread on solid ground.

It is fortunate that at this juncture those who take an interest in the questions involved, especially thoughtful young men and women, are furnished with searching criticisms and able discussions from the Christian standpoint.

One of the recent books which treats of modern scepticism consists of a course of lectures delivered by distinguished English divines before the Christian Evidence Society. These naturally separate into groups.¹ The first three lectures are directed against Materialism, Pantheism, and Positivism,—three systems that are in collision with Christianity; the second group treats of the difficulties arising from the supposed, or assumed, conflict between science and the Bible; the third group deals chiefly with special questions connected with the Bible,—historical points, mythical theories, and the evidential value of Paul's epistles; the two closing lectures treat of Christ's teachings and influence, and the completeness and adequacy of the evidences of Christianity. It will be seen that this is a series of topics of vital importance, and we think them well discussed in this volume. Our only criticism is one of caution, and in the line of our opening sentences: it is not well to lean too much upon the props; let the structure have a firm basis of its own, and do not mistake proofs and evidences for the great truths themselves. There is such a thing as over-proof, a surplusage of argument, a too ready admission of assumed difficulties; let there be a little old-fashioned faith mingled with and upholding our souls, and ever displaying in glowing characters that "the word of the Lord endureth forever."

Still we add: The writers here brought together are men of mark. Such volumes as this, and the Boston Lectures of the last two years, have their mission, and ought to be circulated widely. Mr. Randolph deserves thanks for the admirable style of the volume.

WE are glad to see European scholars, as well as American, setting up able defences of the Christian religion against the assaults of its determined enemies. The Bremen Lectures,² in scholarship, in discrimination, in varied ability, will stand side by side the Bampton and the Boston Lectures. They were delivered to large assemblies at Bremen in the early part of this year. The original design was to consider the chief points of the apostles' creed; but a slight variation was found necessary. The authors are men whose names are known in this country,—such as Zöckler, Suthardt, Tischendorf, and others. The topics are: "The Biblical Account of Creation and Natural Science; Reason, Conscience and Revelation; Miracles; the Person of Jesus Christ; the Resurrection of Christ, as a Soteriological Fact; the Scriptural Doctrine of Atonement; the Authenticity of our Gospels ; the Idea of the Kingdom of God as Perfected, and its Significancy for Historical Christianity ; Christianity and Culture." The first lecture deals with the sceptical geologists in a masterly way. We have seen no explanations more satisfactory. German freethinkers have their equals among their own Christian scholars ; and we welcome this valuable book in our own language.

THE Epistle to the Hebrews¹ is conceded a place in the sacred canon, but has found a less number of expositors than that to the Romans. Mr. Dale has given this epistle careful study, and in his discourses brought to the notice of his readers some fresh and vivid views which deserve and will receive especial attention. He considers fairly, we think, the subject of authorship, and concludes that while the evidence preponderates in favor of Paul, yet it is not decisive. He regards it as addressed to Christian Jews entirely, and hence many of its peculiarities. Those addressed in Chap. vi. 1-7, vv, he considers as surely once converted, but still in danger of apostasy ; and in a sense of this danger was an element of their security. He says "Do you ask me whether it is possible for a Christian man to commit a crime, and to sink into a doom like this ? I dare not obliterate the tremendous force of this passage by denying the possibility. Far better to leave it as it is, — an awful hypothesis, — to warn us against the danger and the guilt, than venture by fine-drawn speculating to diminish its practical power. If you ask me how I can reconcile the possibility which seems implied in the passage as it stands, with the merciful promises which assure us of God's keeping if we trust in Him, I answer . . . and I answer farther, I would rather be charged by a whole council of theologians with introducing scientific inconsistency into a theological system, than dare to lessen the terror of a divinely-inspired warning, the undiminished awfulness of which may be needed to save some soul from death." The author writes with remarkable candor, and his discourses may be read with interest and profit.

THE fourth volume in the Old Testament series of Lange's Commentary,² has come to hand. It contains Joshua, Judges, and Ruth. The commentary on Joshua was prepared in German by Rev. F. R. Fay, a son-in-law of Dr. Lange, and in English by Rev. George R. Bliss, Professor in Lewisburg University, Pennsylvania. The American translator has added textual and grammatical notes, and variously enriched the book with the fruits of his scholarship. The commentary

Of course, Professor Schaff's supervision has been extended over this the same as over the previous volumes of this invaluable work. It is neither expedient nor necessary for us to enter upon any critical review of the book. Of the series, as a whole, it is scarcely possible to speak too highly; as a library of reference and study for the Biblical student, it has no superior, either in comprehensive scope, scholarship, general theological soundness or thoroughness; and in possessing it, a clergyman is pretty well equipped for his work. We have said before, and will repeat the remark, that if individuals, or parishes, or Sabbath-schools, or classes, wish to make a truly valuable present to teacher, superintendent, or pastor, they cannot do better than select Lange's Commentary. Will the hint be taken by any of our readers? In this connection we may say, that for valuable books, really indispensable books for clergymen, we recommend this Commentary, Alford's Greek Testament (Lee & Shepard's edition), and Alford's English Testament by the same publishers, for those unacquainted with the Greek language, and Hurd & Houghton's edition of Smith's Bible Dictionary. With these aids, a minister's work is greatly facilitated, and his means of usefulness largely increased.

WE simply called attention to the "Portable Commentary"¹ in the October Quarterly, promising a fuller notice in the present issue. It comes from the enterprising publishers to whom our readers are so much indebted for many of the best religious works found in our language. This work was but recently published the other side of the ocean. Messrs. Gould and Lincoln, finding a call for it here, arranged for an edition with their own imprimatur, and imported it in sheets, and have it neatly bound in cloth. It is in two octavo volumes; the Old Testament in the first, 777 pages; the New Testament in the second, 644 pages. The print is quite fine, though very clear and distinct. The text is printed only so far as it is subject to comment, or introduced in proof, or for illustration. No reason or apology is given for issuing this work, as none is needed. It opens with a preface, indeed; but that is simply an introduction to the historical and poetical parts of the Old Testament in the first, volume, and of the New Testament in the second. These are brief but comprehensive and instructive. Each chapter has a few leading words as a heading, suggestive of the line of thought it contains. A succinct sketch is given of each book preceding the notes.

The writers evidently had a definite aim, and entered upon their work with abilities and facilities which were an earnest of the success they have achieved. They made themselves familiar with the best productions of the ripest scholars of ancient and modern times, and quotations and references are freely made. While, in so narrow a compass, every verse of the Bible could not be expounded, we have noticed no instance where a difficult, or doubtful, or controverted passage, has been passed over for this reason. The writers are what would be called "old school" in theology, but fair interpreters from their standpoint. Their analysis of a book, or a chapter, is often very striking and suggestive. Every reader of the Bible has never observed that the first chapter of Ephesians speaks of God the Father, the second of the Son, and the third of the Holy Spirit; that this epistle has "love" for its leading theme, and Phillipians, "joy."

The writers are very skilful in catching up the thread of some history when its direct course has been broken. So in doctrinal discussions, where the straight line of reasoning has been interrupted, as by one of Paul's long parentheses, they bridge over the chasm with admirable tact, and thus preserve the continuity of the argument. We have been especially pleased that the poetry of the Psalms and the prophets is not spoiled by dry, prosaic commonplaces; but, in fitting phraseology, expositions are given, such as will meet the demands of the most refined taste. In general, the expositions are critical, yet eminently practical. The style is classical, yet perspicuous; elevated, yet not pedantic. The work is remarkable for its conciseness, and still the explanations are satisfactorily full. We heartily commend it to Sabbath-school teachers and scholars, as well as to every expounder, reader and lover of the Bible.

As a help to the study of the New Testament, the little "Text-Book" ¹ before us may be heartily commended. The author has exercised untiring patience in analyzing, collating and systematically arranging the chief events recorded in the New Testament. Sabbath-school teachers, and biblical students generally, will find this neat little volume a very great convenience and help. Its contents are indicated on the title-page, which we give in full below.

² Songs of the Spirit. Hymns of Praise and Prayer to God the Holy Ghost. Edited by the Rt. Rev. WILLIAM HENRY ODENHEIMER, D. D., and FREDERIC M. BIRD. New York: Anson D. F. Randolph & Co.

Schaff, and published by Randolph & Co., two years ago, was received with great favor. It presented to the lovers of sacred poetry a choice collection of the best ancient and modern hymns to the Redeemer, enriched by many valuable historic notices, and critical, or illustrative notes.

That volume appears to have suggested this, entitled "Songs of the Spirit." The two books correspond exactly in their general plan, and in the style of getting up, and may well occupy the same shelf. Taken together, they afford a striking illustration of the historic identity of Christian experience and life, and of the strong hold which the doctrine of the Trinity has always had on the Christian heart. We are not sure that the real Catholic faith has not been better represented, in the successive centuries down to the present, by the songs of the faithful, than by the various dogmatic confessions. The heart that loves is often truer than the intellect.

It was a far more difficult task to prepare a volume of hymns relating to the Holy Spirit, than of hymns to Christ. Dr. Odenheimer and Mr. Bird have, perhaps, done better, as regards the amount and value of their materials than would have been anticipated. Probably ten respectable hymns to Christ have been written, for every one addressed to the Comforter; yet here we have a volume of more than six hundred pages, filled with sacred song more or less directly relating to the latter. The first three parts are preliminary; containing hymnic prayers for the Spirit, hymns referring to Pentecost, and to the fruits of the Spirit in the soul. Then follow the more immediate addresses to Him in his personal character and work. These are selected from the ancient Latin hymns, and the Italian, the German, Danish, French, English, and American sources. We think the German section of the book the richest, after the Old Latin. It is a little remarkable that the English language has but a moderate number of hymns to the Spirit that are of a high order. Many of the pieces inserted in this volume from the older English writers are rather lyrical pieces for reading, than hymns, in the strict meaning of the word. Yet many of these are gems in their way, and greatly enrich the book. We miss the careful and elaborate editing for which Dr. Schaff's volume was so remarkable; but no one who has that volume will willingly be without this.

There are so few American hymns in the volume that we are the more sorry to see Dr. Ray Palmer's hymn to the Comforter disfigured in the fourth and fifth stanzas by gross typographical errors,—one whole line in the fourth being dropped out and its place supplied by a line brought forward from the preceding stanza; and "help" wrongly read for "health," the true reading, in the fifth.

PHILOSOPHICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

THERE has recently appeared an essay, in the form of a small volume, by President Porter,¹ portions of which were delivered last summer, as an address before the Societies of the Phi Beta Kappa, at Harvard University, and at Trinity College. It claims to be a "Plea for the Science of Man," in opposition to the views advanced by some of the so-called physical philosophers. It opens with what is almost an apotheosis of certain results reached in modern physics. From this the author proceeds to consider the importance of a thorough knowledge of man in order to the right cultivation even of the natural sciences.

This he aims to enforce by an analysis of the conception of science. He shows that, while nature furnishes the materials, man arranges them, and reflecting man explains them. These distinctions he illustrates from various points of view, reaching the conclusion that the true method of interpreting nature is to be found in the soul as rational, and thus in a valid science of the human mind.

He endeavors next to confirm his position by a notice of various defects in some of the current systems which have been recently propounded. Beginning with the "Positive Philosophy" of Comte, and indicating that, according to his teaching, we have only a relative knowledge of phenomena, he concludes that this contingent physical basis is wholly insufficient for the support of the superstructure, because it virtually makes nothing of man.

From Comte he passes on to notice one who is at once his follower and his critic, viz., John Stuart Mill. It is the author's aim to show that, while Mill contends for the legitimacy of psychological investigation, he yet is deficient in four all-important points. He fails to give a satisfactory view both of mind and of matter, as well as of the process and of the axioms of induction itself.

He proceeds next to notice the position of the cerebralists, that viz., of Bain and his school, who claim that a so-called physiological psychology is the only sure ground for a science of the soul. Without denying any of the truths implied in this system, Dr. Porter tries to evince that the foundation is altogether too narrow and superficial to support a true science of nature.

Advancing from Comte and Mill, and from the cerebralists, he finally notices Herbert Spencer, and finds him also wanting. While recognizing in his writings much that is important, while pleased with him as holding that psychology is fundamental to all philosophy, whether of mind or of spirit, he yet discovers, as he thinks, that these fair promises are sacrificed to the merciless requisitions of a metaphysical hypothesis. No trustworthy or abiding resting-place is found, since he brings in evolution, acting as a movement of differentiation and of integration,—a supposition which not only is not proved, but is left susceptible of almost any meaning, according to the shifting character of circumstances and the wayward changes of a vagrant fancy.

In closing the essay, Dr. Porter, after making a few timely limitations and strictures, urges the study of mind as suited to correct such exclusive tendencies as those he had passed in review, and to render the study of nature more adequate and satisfactory.

After this general presentation of the line of argument carried out by President Porter in the essay under consideration, it may be appropriate to observe that many points brought forward have been fairly considered, and are very well presented. The present effort, like most of the doctor's writings, evinces the results of a rather wide range of reading. While there is no evidence of the profoundest grasp of thought, the views are generally clear and calculated to commend themselves to the judgment of most for whom he writes. This remark suggests, indeed, the author's characteristic excellence, which serves to give him access to many minds, which another of greater depth and breadth of views might fail to reach.

Perhaps it may be fitly added that the title of the book under review, "the Science of Nature versus the Science of Man," is unhappy. It implies the existence of an antagonism between the natural sciences and the science of mind. As the essay asserts the very contrary, it is unfortunate that any such conflict should be suggested, particularly in the title, which is supposed to reflect, if not to epitomize, the substance of the volume it designates. It is seldom well, in this way, to suppose or admit any contrariety of the kind in question, since it does not really exist. Indeed, there is essential unison between all the different sciences, when properly understood, and to this point prominence should be given, because it is warranted by facts.

It may be proper to say that, in the reading of the book, there has been a constant sense of disappointment. A bound volume, with the title it bears, by Dr. Porter, President of Yale College, suggests, instead of a brief, cursory examination of Comte, Mill, Bain and Spencer, a philosophic exposition, of an exhaustive character, of the relations between the sciences of nature and the science of mind distinctively understood. The book, however, makes no such pretensions, and very likely in this point the fault lies in the reader, rather than in the author of the essay under examination.

For the most part, the style of the volume is lucid, and the language correct. There are, however, occasional inaccuracies, at which, as occurring in the writings of a person occupying such a position as Dr. Porter has long occupied, and especially the one which he now occupies, many, no doubt, will feel surprise. Few would expect to hear him saying, much less to find him deliberately writing, p. 14, "I was not mistaken," when he evidently means, not that he had avoided misunderstanding, but that he was not in error. An instance of a plural subject united to a verb in the singular number, occurs on p. 47,—"does he adhere to the one construction which his formal definitions, as well as the whole drift of his philosophy, requires him to support." A somewhat different example may be seen, p. 65; which, although scriptural (Prov. 27: 3), is hardly grammatical. "Spencer . . . claims to be more profound than them all." One instance more, from many others marked for citation, must suffice. The form of expression used, p. 47, "which of these alternatives does he embrace?" seems to imply that in a given case there can be more than one "alternative." The meaning of course is, "which horn of the dilemma does he take?"

While the views advanced by the author are generally clear and candid, there are occasional instances of crudeness, of partial presentation, and perhaps also of misconception. Thus he says, p. 35, "The Positive Philosophy is properly, if not emphatically, metaphysical." That Comte sometimes introduced subjects of a metaphysical character, occasionally, also, metaphysical elements, is very true; but they are not his system, and they do not make it metaphysical; for his system overrides them all. Besides, he ever handles them, according to the laws of a purely physical system, virtually according to antecedent and consequent, cause and effect, and the like, and thus reduces all to the hard mechanism of mere nature. Again, we find Dr. Porter, p. 22, speaking of naturalists as "founding systems on principles." That some would-be naturalists attempt this is very true; but of such he is not speaking. The genuine naturalist does not found, or profess to found or create, a system. His is a more humble task: he simply recognizes, or tries to recognize, the divine system in nature, and expounds its principles. His work is one of recognition and exposition of a system already founded, and of principles divinely established. This criticism is offered, because a certain "pride of philosophy" seems to be constantly cropping out in the essay under consideration. So the representation made of Socrates, p. 14, while not intentionally wrong, will no doubt appear to the student of Plato, to say nothing of such as have thoroughly studied Socrates in the Timaeus, as calculated to give at least a one-sided and distorted view of the "father of Greek philosophy."

Again, it may be remarked, that President Porter, while criticising the so-called physical philosophers, for their absorption in nature and lack of a proper estimate of the science of mind, does himself occasionally use language, which, strictly interpreted, would inevitably bind him in the fetters of naturalism. Thus he says, p. 19, "I would even be so audacious as to seek to show that in all these (sciences of nature) man must be a constant quantity." Now these sciences, in their progress, unavoidably undergo ceaseless changes, and necessitate endless modifications in the elements and agencies concerned in them. So much for the presence of man in these sciences as a "constant quantity." But this is not all; the word "quantity" has its definite, physical import. If, now, by this term, reference be made to man in his higher and essential potency (and if not this, the clause has no meaning as here used), the very word "quantity" implies that man, theoretically regarded, is wholly comprised in a physical system. Indeed, in another passage, the doctor says this very thing in express words. "We cannot," he writes, p. 93, "have a science of nature which does not regard the spirit of man as a part of nature." Now, while man has a physical constitution, as spirit is he not much more than this? Is it not true, if he be a spirit, and expected as spirit to conquer nature and exercise lordship over her, that he must be not merely by his physical constitution "a part of nature," but also as a "spirit" superior to her, and of good right, master, even, of his own nature? Verily, if these things be not so, President Porter's book has been written in vain.

But, without noticing many other points fairly open to criticism, it may be finally remarked that this author deserves hearty commendation both for his aim, and for laboring to secure, according to the motto on the title-page, "a larger metaphysics," and particularly for one so broad and deep as to "help our physics." And, though his book has defects, it is no doubt suited to suggest to many minds some new phases of thought, and thus to lead them to more comprehensive views, and so perhaps nearer to the truth itself, than they would otherwise be likely to get. As such it is cordially commended.

THOSE who wish to understand the present issues between the popular forms of infidelity and Christianity, will be gratified with Dr. Manning's new book entitled, "Half Truths and the Truth."¹ The volume consists of nine lectures delivered to the students of Andover Seminary, with an introduction of thirty-six pages. The author presents the relations of clergymen to science and the duties of the church as to those moral themes of which infidels sometimes avail themselves as an aid in the propagation of error. Distinguishing between Pantheism and Positivism, the opposite poles of scepticism, he devotes these lectures to the consideration of the former. As between the transcendental and the empirical philosophy, he supports the former, but maintains that it needs to be guided and supplemented by a Christian faith. The general themes selected for the successive lectures are as follows: "I. Spinoza and other Masters. II. The Nature and grounds of Pantheism. III. The German Succession. IV. The Pantheistic Christology. V. The Culture which Pantheism legitimates. VI. Pantheism in the form of Hero-worship. VII. Pantheism in the form of Self-worship. VIII. Theism with a Pantheistic drift. IX. The Strength and Weakness of Pantheism."

Some may be led to infer from these titles and from the fact that the lectures were prepared originally for theological students, that the volume consists of a series of philosophical disquisitions, which will interest none but persons of speculative taste and culture. This is far from the truth. The lectures are, indeed, scholarly, and evince a wide range of literary and philosophical attainment. There are portions of them which will be fully appreciated only by the most discriminating minds; and yet they are of a remarkably varied character, giving biography, history, philosophy, science and literature, in such succession and combination that the volume, as a whole, will interest a great variety of minds. There are portions which are sketchy in their character, personal and popular. Indeed, it might prepare the reader for the actual contents of the book, and possibly save some philosophical minds from disappointment, had the learned author placed in a brief preface to his work the following sentence, found on the 79th page: "I am not assuming the office of an historian of philosophy; but simply sketching the general course of speculative thought, as far as may be needful to show the origin of a class of popular infidelities."

One of the first impressions which the book makes is that of candor, justice, and kindness towards the opponents to Christianity. This spirit we appreciate. It has too often been wanting in the writings of controversialists. It is, ordinarily, only by a conciliatory course that we can hope to influence the rejecters of the truth. And yet we cannot but feel that Dr. Manning, in the introduction to this volume, goes too far in this direction. He defines an infidel as a "person who does not recognize the authority of Christ as final on all questions of religious faith." Distinguishing between this and the etymological meaning, which implies apostasy, he says: "Though the infidel of to-day is one who dwells where Christ is preached, and who, therefore, may have fallen away from the Christian faith into his present state of unbelief, yet his heart does not plead guilty to the charge of treachery. He may have a conviction of honesty and the approval of conscience in what he has done. All this we are ready to grant him."

There may be, it is true, a kind of honesty, and the approval of conscience, in a popular sense, conceded to the infidel, particularly if we take into view only his intellectual faculties. But when we include in our purview his moral instincts, "the infidel of to-day who dwells where Christ is preached" cannot be in the highest sense "honest," nor have the "approval of conscience" in the strictest sense. The author's error seems to be in considering the infidel for the time being simply as possessed of an intellect, without moral faculties. He adds, "If the word 'infidelity' be odious to-day, the odium is in the character of those who have been its advocates. To be an infidel is no more a shame now, than to be crucified was a shame in the time of Christ."

This is not only going further than the truth will warrant, but further than the author himself goes in the body of his work. For he afterwards says, "conscience and the understanding should not be put asunder; and in joining them together, conscience should be assigned the uppermost seat." Again: "In the last analysis, all forms of religious error may be brought to a single source,—the separation of man from God. . . . It is evident, since man came forth from God, that his faculties must have acted abnormally, leading him astray constantly in all his searches after truth, as soon as he had separated himself from God." "All systems of religious error have their genesis in the estrangement of men from God."

Is there nothing "odious," "and is there no "shame," we are constrained to ask, in "estrangement from God," and in so continuing to exercise our faculties "abnormally" as to perpetuate that estrangement? We may well approach the rejecters of the truth with candor and kindness; but, even for purposes of conciliation, we should never lean so far towards them as to endanger the support of our own centre of gravity. Even he afterwards goes so far in using terms of condemnation as to speak of the "vices of pantheism," and says, "it puts on disguises"; and again "a system of thinking cannot be true which thus fails to endure the test of conscience." Dr. Manning has studied thoroughly the writings of our popular infidel authors, and he spares no pains in giving a fair and clear statement of their views; indeed, to a very great extent (too great, some will think) he allows space in his volume to a presentation of their views in their own language. He proves plainly that Ralph Waldo Emerson, as a philosopher, is no philanthropist; but it is a thankless task to attempt to prove anything from the writings of a man who despises logic.

We should infer from the general manner in which the author speaks of the "fundamental beliefs of the soul," our "necessary convictions" and "immediate cognitions," that he is not a Utilitarian; and yet there is one sentence in his book, viz.: "God reigns over the universe because He is love; it is being the servant of all, as no other can be, that makes him Lord of all," which, in its unqualified character, looks like carrying Utilitarianism to that utmost verge where its weakness is exposed.

The calmness and self-possession with which the author meets every issue are notable. There are no marks of haste or carelessness in the style of the writer; the rhetorical finish of the sentences is admirable. There are sharp analysis and convincing refutation, which will make the book eminently useful. We only wish that the positive presentation of "The Truth" were more extended.

The publisher has done his work with skill and taste, but the proof-reader left an illustration of the importance of even an iota, when, on the 328th page he leaves, "the cat defied," instead of "deified"!

Of late years, books which contained attacks upon Christianity have met with a rapid and extensive sale, while equally able books refuting them have found but a limited patronage. Whether we attribute this discredit-able fact to the tendencies of the natural heart to unbelief, to the special decadence at the present time in religious faith, or to the great activity and zeal of the enemies of the truth, the friends of Christianity will commit a great wrong if they allow this timely and valuable book to fail of a wide circulation.

SCIENCE¹ is now being summoned to render aid in the war against revelation, and philosophy to destroy confidence in religion. Professor Bascom has done wisely and well in publishing his Lowell Lectures, in which he so successfully wrests from the hands of captious speculators these natural allies of that Christian scheme whose sole foundation is the Bible. As a metaphysician, the author is a master, taking and ably defending the position that we "find in the mind itself those ideas by means of which it groups and explains the facts of the physical and spiritual world." The "positivism" of Comte, Mill and Spencer, and the "idealism" of Berkeley and his followers, are shown to be unsatisfactory, and contradicted alike by experience and observation. He affirms, unhesitatingly, that the "mind does furnish ideas, and those, too, the essential ones which give order, system, reason, to all its actions." He enumerates the "intuitions," and proves that "there is in the mind an independent source of power."

The following are the topics of the different Lectures: Mind, the Seat and Source of Knowledge; Primitive Ideas; the Field of Physical Facts; Resemblance not the sole Connection of Thought; Matter, its Existence and Nature; Consciousness, the Field of Mental Facts; Right, the Law of Intellectual Life; Liberty; life, nature and origin,—the Mind; Interaction of Physical Forces and Spiritual Forces; Primitive Religious Conceptions; Classification of Knowledge; Form of Development.

CHARLES SCRIBNER & Co. have a habit of continually surprising the public by the magnitude and value of their literary ventures; their list of books comprises many of the most important in all the departments of literature, and the selection is made with good judgment, and with a quick apprehension of the tastes of the reader and the student.

They have recently begun the publication of a "Theological and Philosophical Library," to be edited by Henry B. Smith, D.D., and Philip Schaff, D.D., of the Union Theological Seminary, New York. The design is to furnish at least one condensed standard work on each of the scientific divisions of Theology and Philosophy, giving the results of the best critical investigations in Biblical, Historical, Systematic, and Practical Theology, and in Philosophy. Some of the works will be translated from the German and other languages; some will be written for this "Library" by English and American scholars, and others will be based upon treatises of various authors. It will be seen that the plan is comprehensive, and if carried out as initiated, our ministers and students can have within reach the choicest productions of the best minds in the most available and practical form.

The first volume, just issued, is a translation of Ueberweg's "History of Philosophy from Thales to the Present Time,"¹ and covers the ancient and mediæval ground. To the translation, by Professor Morris, of the University of Michigan, which is very highly commended, President Porter, of Yale College, has made many and valuable annotations bearing especially on the history of English and American Philosophy. It is impossible, in our limited space this month, to give even a clear analysis of this thoughtful and scholarly book. The introduction is in itself a monument of honest labor and careful research, and treats concisely and well of the conception, method, and sources of the history of Philosophy; then follows a critical examination of the Pre-Christian and Oriental Philosophies, of course presenting the systems of the Greeks; and this, in turn, is followed by an examination of the philosophy of the Christian era.

The book is for real students, and is a thesaurus of information carefully gathered and systematically presented. The over-generous use of small type is to be regretted; it not only gives a dreary monotony and crowded appearance to the page, but demands too much of the eyes. In all other respects the book is a model of typography. We hope the reception of this first volume of the proposed series will be such as to justify the publishers in their great undertaking.

MISCELLANEOUS.

¹“THE Christian Marriage Ceremony” is an interesting book. It is valuable, too, as containing not a little curious information, in relation to the institution of marriage. It is a historical and illustrative commentary on the subject, rather than a discussion. Admitting that marriage involves a civil contract,—inasmuch as it belongs to the civil law to determine all questions of inheritance, legitimacy, alimony, and the charge of children in case of separation, and other similar things,—the author still maintains that the ceremony is essentially a religious rite, and has been so regarded among all nations that have advanced towards civilization. It would be difficult to find elsewhere, in a small compass, so much useful information on this subject,—especially worthy of attention at the present time,—as is brought together in this volume. It is handsomely printed, with a three-fold index, which adds materially to its value.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE continues to give to the public its weekly freight of valuable articles reprinted from the numerous quarterlies and magazines of the Old World. Christian families often inquire where they can find a comprehensive periodical, affording a great variety of matter, and exerting an elevating and Christian influence; to all such we say, you will find it in the issue of Messrs. Littell & Gay, No. 30 Bromfield st., Boston. Price $8.00 a year.

EDITORS' TABLE.

THE issue of this number is unpleasantly late. We have this explanation to give:—The statistics of one State came January 1, in manuscript, and those of New York came January 31. The latter came in manuscript, by associations, and had to be copied (for alphabetical arrangement) figure by figure, which took just one night. But beyond, Pennsylvania had to be furnished from figures reported to the New York General Association; the summaries of these two States prepared, largely by addition; the laborious general summaries had to receive the New York and Pennsylvania lines, and to be added up throughout; the list of Ministers, ready except New York, had to be furnished; the list of General Associations completed, and the whole put in type, and corrected and revised. The entire statistics were in type, except as above, and waited. Thirty pages of non-pareil were impossible, till New York came, besides its own pages and those of Pennsylvania. But we decided that the delay was preferable to sending out Tables and List of Ministers without New York, and without Summaries.

We beg not to be understood as complaining of the laborious New York Secretary. He was diligently trying to get the figures from the delinquent scribes and churches in his statistically stony field; and, at the earliest moment he sent us the tables in manuscript, at much cost of labor.

Now and then we see recommendations that these statistics be published in an annual year-book, or almanac. We have no objection. It would pay better. But we suggest that the publisher of such an annual, due December 25th, to be of any use in the market, would get impatient if he had to wait until February 1st for his "copy." We seriously advise our New York brethren to fix the date of collection earlier than August 31st, unless they are able to furnish the figures in less than six months thereafter.

While thanking all the secretaries for their cordial help, we are under particular obligations to Rev. E. M. Cravath, for reports of nearly all our Southern churches.

CONCERNING THE CONGREGATIONAL STATISTICS.—The organization of a National Council is a good point from which to perfect our annual statistics. There has been a great improvement in ten years past; there is room for further improvement at once. Our work in compiling for the Quarterly for a dozen years (less a vacation of three), has forced us to see defects. Looking at the handsome tables in this issue of the Quarterly, one would not imagine the labor it cost, to make them uniform, prepare the summaries of the several States, and compile the list of Ministers. We give due credit to prior labor of the several statistical Secretaries, of which we have ample experience in Massachusetts. The minutes of most of the State organizations are monuments of industry. And yet there are but seven whose line of "total" can be copied as being that of the Congregational churches of the respective State. When our religious weeklies copy the summary given in State minutes, in the supposition that it gives the denominational figures of that State, they are mistaken two times out of three. For our tables, which strictly follow State lines, churches have to be transferred from one publication to another; and yet always so few as to make it the more aggravating; and very aggravating when we have to subtract Presbyterian churches.

A wonderful improvement has taken place in the twelve years past. At that time the tables of some States seemed to be purposely contrived to defy every inquirer. Now all the minutes are good (save one that is inexcusable in giving no totals whatever). What is now needed, is uniformity and completeness. The principal defect is in some summaries. A Summary should afford an instant answer to every reasonable question, without the necessity of a single mathematical process on the part of the inquirer.

We commend the summary of Michigan as an example. It gives, first, a line of total of churches (and reported items) connected with the General Association. Then comes a line "Deduct out State," and then are added to that result, "churches in the State, not associated." The final result is "Total in the State," and is reliable. Thus the Associational tables are not disturbed, and yet the result is reached, and that on one page. A very little effort on the part of Secretaries, would secure reports from the few churches which cross State lines in their Conference memberships.

We venture to suggest, as particulars of value:

1. A complete list of all the churches in a State, with reports thereof,—the summary furnishing a line of total corresponding exactly with State boundaries.

2. A uniform arrangement of items common to all. The following order (which is in our tables) is almost universally adopted:

CHURCHES.	Place and Name.	Organized.	MINISTERS.	Name.	Ordained.	Commenced.	CH. MEMB'R'S.			Adm't'd		Removals		BAPT.
							Male.	Female.	TOTAL.	Prof.	Letter.	TOTAL.	Deaths.	Dism.	Excom.

It would be a great convenience if all would adopt this. Of course, as tables always run up and down (instead of across) the page, there is room for full dates; and, at the end, room for additional items not common to all. Now, some merely reverse adult and infant baptisms, but a few interchange the items entirely. One or two give no date of statistical year.

3. When a minister supplying a church belongs to some other denomination, or is a licentiate, the fact ought to be stated, with his name. There should also always be added to the minister's name, "p." or "s.s." or its equivalent.

4. Some States leave blanks where figures ought to be. If "none" is the fact, a cipher "0" should be inserted. Otherwise, it is impossible to tell whether the church reported. Blanks signify neglect oftener than anything else.

5. A complete Summary is of the highest importance. It should include every item in the tables. It should also include a recent report for churches not reporting, and state the fact. There is more failure to insert in Summaries the numbers as to pastors, supplies, etc., than anything else. Few States give the needed information. We have had this year, in half the States, to check off on the alphabetical list, the entire supply of churches, so as to learn how many churches have pastors, how many have stated supplies, how many are supplied by Presbyterians, etc.

6. Benevolent Contributions and Church Expenses ought to be distinguished. Some States report "other objects," which evidently mix with the above. The number of churches reporting contributions ought to be stated, so as to have data for a fair comparison of two years. We have to count for the Quarterly in four-fifths of the States.

We respectfully suggest that a good Summary ought to answer the following questions:—

- I. As to churches:
 1. How many now have settled pastors?
 2. How many now have stated supplies, who are (ordained) Congregational Ministers?
 3. How many are supplied by licentiates, or men of other denominations?
 4. How many are vacant?
 5. TOTAL number of churches in the State?
- II. As to ministers:
 1. How many are settled pastors of the above churches?
 2. How many (ordained) Congregational Ministers are stated supplies to the above churches?
 3. How many Congregational Ministers in the State not in pastoral service?
 4. TOTAL number of (ordained) Congregational Ministers in the State?
 5. How many licentiates under care?
- III. As to items:

The total of each column in the tables, as above.
- IV. As to Contributions:
 1. How much charitable; and how many churches report it?
 2. How much for church support, such as (1) current expenses (2), church building, etc.; and how many churches report it?
 3. Lists of changes, etc., during the year:
 1. Of all churches entered on the list.
 2. Of all churches dropped from last year's list.
 3. Of all persons ordained as pastors.
 4. Of all persons ordained without installation.
 5. Of all persons installed.
 6. Of all pastors dismissed.
 7. Of all pastors deceased.
 8. Of all other ministers deceased.

VI. A list of licentiates under care.

VII. A complete alphabetical (P. O.) list of all Congregational Ministers, either mentioned in the tables as supplying churches, or reported by any local Association.

In fact, if one will look at the Summary of any State in this Quarterly say Connecticut,—he will see what a Summary ought to be. All the above items (except V and VI) really have the data for answers in most of the State reports; but in many it involves much labor to extricate the answers.

Of course, it is hardly fair to allude to typographical, or similar errors. Even our own Quarterly sometimes furnishes examples of our own mistakes, which makes us admire the ingenuity which achieved them. Most of the State reports are carefully edited. But we are obliged to wonder who edited a table of nine churches only, which furnishes six errors of addition in the first six columns, and an impossible total; gives no date of the statistical year, no list of ministers, no list of officers, and no designation of pastors. We are glad to learn one fact,—that the body has chosen a new secretary.

We suggest one mechanical beauty; the columns of each statistical page ought to correspond precisely with the columns of every other,—the upright lines on one, matching those of another. There is also room in all, to insert the year of ordination of each pastor and supply, which is much better than to require a search somewhere else in the book.

We doubt not that the above suggestions will be taken in good part, as being for the general good. We are working for that, and that only. And we desire every one to see how handsomely our printers have done their work, in our annual statistics in this number.

So much of our first number for the year is occupied with statistics, we have less space for that variety which we seek generally to give. And in the present instance, although we have enlarged the number beyond the dimensions of any which we have ever before issued, still the vast amount of statistical matter, and the unusual length of the few articles given, have obliged us to defer to the April number a large amount of necrological and literary matter already in type.

We are confident that publishers of books and our readers desire thoroughness and candor in our literary review; and we have no fears but that our subscribers will be gratified with the size and quality of the number which we now send out to them.

SINCE our last issue, "The Congregational Review" of Chicago has been sold to the publisher of the "New Englander," of New Haven. To our western brethren this is one of the calamities involved in the great conflagration. We remember the "Review" as a neighbor, representing high Calvinism, and charged with the responsibility of conserving the orthodoxy of our denomination. Having taken a detour via Chicago, it has reached a new haven. Query. Has its orthodoxy been toned down as a result of having passed through the fire?

The publisher of the "New Englander" announced that the "Quarterly" had been united with his work. As one half of our editors are graduates of Yale, we will not assume that this is a specimen of the exactness of New Haven scholarship, but are happy to say that our friend, Mr. Kingsley, honorably issued a circular to correct his error, and we wish him abundant success in his consolidated work.

THE AMERICAN CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

LAST September, the Directors sent out an appeal to all the Congregational churches—more than 2,000—that had not given a farthing for the Congregational House, urging "the one fair memorial gift," at the earliest convenient date. More than one thousand of these were accompanied by a manuscript note or letter from the corresponding secretary. Responses began to be returned in money or pledges of collections, when, early in October, the great Chicago disaster shocked the country and the civilized world, and calls for immediate contributions were loud and imperious, and, of course, must be heeded. Appointments that had been made for the presentation of the claims of this Association, in important pulpits, had to be surrendered; and very little could be done for this "House" fund through October, November and December.

Early this year another appeal was issued, in the hope that during January and February some of the lost ground might be regained. But now, the theological seminary and two Congregational churches of Chicago, whose houses of worship were burned, are in the field with most pressing pleas for $100,000, at once, for their immediate relief; so that the present out-look is not the most flattering.

But the first of May is near at hand. One of the buildings, already purchased, will be upon the hands of the directors, and must be remodelled for occupancy to save from great loss. The other building will be very soon vacated, and the necessity of early and vigorous efforts to put the entire estate into a condition for an income could scarcely be more urgent. The seventy-five thousand dollars now in hand and pledged, will not make the necessary changes. The directors are a unit against increasing the debt upon the Association. Twenty-five thousand dollars more will complete what is now deemed absolutely essential to make the alterations that must be made to subserve the convenience of the intended occupants, and secure a remunerative rent from the apartments that can be made available for that purpose.

If the 2,500 Congregational churches that have given nothing would now send us, on an average, but ten dollars each, we should meet the exigency. If one half of them would send us, on an average, fifty dollars each,—and they could easily do so,—we could put all into good shape and commence a sinking fund, which would be an earnest of paying off the two mortgages of one hundred thousand dollars each, at no very distant day, when all our benevolent societies would have their rents free, and so make a great saving to the cause of Christian benevolence. Will not every pastor whose church has taken no collection, and every Congregational Christian who has made no gift to this object, now consider its claims, and send as below, "the one memorial offering" from the church or the individual? Let it be extra! Let it cost some inconvenience, if it must! It is only once for all.

ISAAC P. LANGWORTHY,
Corresponding Secretary.

BOSTON, 40 Winter street, Feb. 9, 1872.

AMERICAN CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

THE National Council at Oberlin, adopted unanimously the following:—
 “Resolved. (1.) That as the work of aiding to erect Christian sanctuaries in our home mission fields was inaugurated in the Albany Convention, and was taken up with renewed enthusiasm by the Boston Council, so this first meeting of our Triennial Council ought to work a new epoch of increased efficiency, and enlarged usefulness in the history of this enterprise.

“Resolved. (2.) That in the judgment of this Council, the American Congregational Union ought to receive and disburse, within the coming year, $100,000, thus securing the erection of not less than 200 church edifices where they will be permanent centres of saving influences in our new States and Territories.

“Resolved. (3.) That to accomplish this object, it is hereby earnestly recommended to all the churches which are represented in this Council, to take a collection for this cause, with as little delay as possible; and to give it a prominent place every year on their schedule of stated contributions.”

The Union has paid the following appropriations since those reported in the Congregational Quarterly for October, 1871:—

Chatham, N. H. (Post-office, Stowe, Me.)	•	•	•	•	•	$400.00
South Royalton, Vt.	•	•	•	•	•	$500.00
Ada, Mich.	•	•	•	•	•	$300.00
Ceresco, Mich.	•	•	•	•	•	$300.00
Cambria, Minn. First Welsh Church. (Post-office, Butternut Valley.)	•	•	•	•	•	$350.00
Plainview, Minn.	•	•	•	•	•	$500.00
Gilman, Iowa	•	•	•	•	•	$500.00
North Topeka, Kan.	•	•	•	•	•	$400.00
						$3,250.00

The Union now has between thirty and forty churches to which pledges of assistance have already been made, and about twenty more which are pleading for help. Some churches and individuals are responding nobly to the appeals made on behalf of this beneficent work.

The churches assisted are bearing fresh testimony to the efficiency of the aid granted them. Thus from one of the last churches aided we have the statement, on the receipt of the appropriation of $500, “We shall, through the greatest exertion, clear the church and society from all indebtedness up to this date. It could never have been done but for aid from you; but on the other hand, we should have been loaded down with a debt, interest and all, of some $1,400 and over.”

Thus we have an illustration of the inspiring influence of the help given by the Union. From seven to nine times the amount of our grant is developed from the resources of the churches receiving aid.

The financial year of the Union ends with the close of April. We need $50,000 before the 1st of May. Will not the churches appreciate the unanimous action of the National Council, and lift the poor churches from a state of dependence to one of self-support?

THE ANNUAL STATISTICS OF THE
AMERICAN CONGREGATIONAL
MINISTERS AND CHURCHES,

COLLECTED IN THE YEAR 1871

BY THE
Secretaries of the Several State Organizations, AND COMPILED FOR THE PUBLICATION
BY THE SECRETARY OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL.

AUTHORITIES AND EXPLANATIONS.

I. AUTHORITIES. The publications of the several General Associations or Conferences in 1871 are reproduced in the following tables, with reports in manuscript from sections where none are printed.

The changes in thus reproducing are these: The lists of churches given in the State reports by Associations, Conferences, or Counties, are here rearranged in alphabetical order for each State, including those churches, and those only [except in brackets] in existence at the date of the State reports. State organizations do not always correspond with State boundaries; and churches reported by a State organization other than their own are transferred to their proper place (which changes the "total churches" given in State Minutes), so as to give the exact statistics of each State. The order of columns of figures, slightly varying in different States, is made uniform. The tables, as furnished, are carefully scrutinized, and sometimes amended by correspondence with the secretaries. The names of pastors and acting pastors are inserted or erased, according to changes occurring since the printing of the State publications, and down to the time of the printing of these pages. The first names of ministers are inserted in the "List of Ministers," often at great expense of time; but initials are left in the tables as printed in the State Minutes. No alterations of figures are ever made (except in correcting errors on proper authority); but the Totals of several States are altered by the transfers of churches above mentioned. "Last year's reports" are invariably omitted; but the aggregate of such, for all churches this year enumerated but making "no report," is included in the Summary of each State (if such church has reported within three years); which also often affects the Summaries. Omissions or insertions of names of pastors or acting pastors, on account of changes subsequent to the printing of the State Minutes, are not allowed to alter the Summaries then given, in respect to the pastoral relation. Nor is the insertion of names, erased as pastors, in the several lists of "other ministers," allowed to change the original counting of those lists; but they are altered by the transfer of names of ministers reported by a State body from whose territory they have removed to the State where they actually reside. A blank signifies, invariably, "no report," and is never equivalent to "none."

II. EXPLANATIONS. As to churches: towns are arranged in alphabetical order in each State; churches in each town according to age; and of each church,—1st, its town; 2d, its name or number; 3d, its locality in the town.

As to ministers: the position of all in pastoral work is designated when reported. Pastors (settled or installed), by "p." ; others, by "s. s." (stated supply), "s. p." (stated preacher), or "a. p." (acting pastor),—which three terms, used in different States, are equivalent to each other. But when, in any State, some are marked "p.", and others are not marked, these others are all "s. s." ; and so conversely. The two dates following "ministers" denote, respectively, the year of ordination and that of commencing labor with the church mentioned. "Licentiates" are not reckoned as ministers. Churches supplied by "licentiates," or by ministers of other denominations, are reckoned as vacant; but the names of such are inserted in brackets, and the fact and number are mentioned in the Summary of each State. Post-office addresses are to be found in the general alphabetical "List of Ministers" following, and not in the tables.

As to church-members: the month of reckoning differs in different States, as will be seen by noticing the heading to each page. "Absent" are included in "males," "females," and "totals." "Additions," "Removals," and "Baptisms," cover the twelve months preceding the date given in the headings of each State.

As to Sabbath Schools: the entire membership at the mentioned date is given not the "average attendance," except when specially mentioned.

Changes in the lists of churches—names of those added to and those dropped from the lists of last year—are given with the Summary of each State; and also the organizations into which the churches or ministers are associated, and the number of ordinations, etc., in each State during the Statistical year.

Items not common to all the States, but collected in any, are merely aggregated in the Summary of each State.

[We are almost ashamed to attempt a summary of a table so defective. We have had reported the names given. For most of the churches not reported above, we are told that they are, in the aggregate, “substantially as last year,” but we resist the temptation to insert the old figures in the table above. But, for a summary, we reckon them as last year, and count increase or decrease only on those now reporting. Of course, the additions and removals should be very much larger, — at least three times as large. We have promises for next year.]

⁴³There are also 101 Foreign Missionaries, besides the four in Jamaica.

In the above table, note,—1. Most of the churches "not supplied" have regular public worship, but no one minister engaged for continuous service; generally in the interval between pastorates.

2. The number of ministers "not in pastoral work," includes only those who are members of some Association or Conference. When persons not thus members cease to be in pastoral work, they necessarily cease to be reported.

3. "Benevolent Contributions" do not include any parish expenses, endowments of colleges, etc. Such items are partially given in the summaries of the several States. Those starred (*) are of last year, and are too small, this year's reports being not separated into items.

In the above table, note.—1. The "totals" of church members, additions, and removals, in several States, and so in the footings, exceed the sum of particulars; because the "total" is occasionally given, with no report of the particulars whose addition makes such "totals." The particulars are slightly less, as reported, than they ought to be.

2. The "excommunications" sometimes include, though not with strict accuracy, the number of persons whose names are dropped from church list on account of long absence.

3. In "Sabbath Schools," Iowa reports the "average attendance" only.

4. The churches making no report are included in the Summaries, with past reports of membership (if any are found within three years). But the report of "additions," "removals," and "baptisms" is (as usual) too small by just the number those churches might have reported.

The above table is incomplete. Eight States only, report their items in a form to be understood. For those not reporting them, we have collated lists of this and last year, or have searched our Quarterly Record, in which cases we have assumed the statistical year to have ended with the month next preceding the annual meetings of the respective General Associations. A list of all new churches, and of all churches dropped from the tables, is given with the summary of each State.

Arkansas is dropped from the list this year; Nevada is inserted.

In the above table, the fifth column, churches having ministers "not specified," means that it was not stated whether those ministers were pastors or acting pastors; but it is evident that most of them had acting pastors. The tenth column, "condition not reported," doubtless should be considered almost entirely as vacant churches. The seventeenth column, ministers whose position was not reported, i. e. whether in pastoral work or not, should doubtless be almost entirely added to the column of those not in pastoral work. For several years past we have succeeded in reducing these columns of unknowns to "0."

It will be seen that in the past ten years the net gain of churches is 647, or .253. Net gain of ministers not including foreign missionaries, 446, or .161. Net gain of church members, 57,020, or .223. Net gain in Sabbath Schools, 122,759, or .494.

REMARKS UPON THE ANNUAL (U. S.) STATISTICS.

The changes by States are given in SUMMARY II. The main items in the several Summaries harmonize with those in SUMMARY III, as follows:—

CHURCHES.—Last year, 3,121; net increase (141 new, less 60 dropped, as in SUMMARY II), 81; present number, 3,202, as in SUMMARY I.

CHURCH MEMBERS.—Last year, 306,518; net increase (6,349 gain, less 813 loss, as in SUMMARY III), 5,536; present number, 312,054, as in SUMMARY II.

IN SABBATH SCHOOLS.—Last year, 361,465; net increase (14,012 gain, less 6,540 loss, as in SUMMARY III), 7,472; present number, 368,937, as in SUMMARY II.

BENEVOLENT CONTRIBUTIONS.—Last year, $954,555.76; net increase in States reporting last year ($200,239.28 increase, less $5,157.40 decrease, as in SUMMARY III), $195,081.88; add $1,176.55 in States not reporting last year; amount reported this year, $1,150,814.19, as in Summary I.

It is entirely useless to attempt to harmonize ordinations, etc., with the differences in pastorate; or the net gain of members by States, with the difference between "additions" and "removals."

Last year, 2,341 churches made report of their charitable contributions; this year, 2,427. Thus, 715 churches this year gives no knowledge of their contributions, some of which are strong and liberal churches. A fair examination of the condition of the whole, and of their past donations, indicates that a report from these would add at least $200,000 to the "total." Besides, no account is here taken of legacies, large endowments, etc., while members of one church are said to have given $150,000 over amount reported.

Money raised for PARISH EXPENSES are not sufficiently reported to give a full "total." No New England State reports, neither does New York. In the other States, 848 churches report $1,155,970.38, — an average of $1,364.78. But this includes the great mass of our missionary churches, and almost all of our small churches in the South and extreme West. Michigan is perhaps a fair average, out of New England and New York, — $1,418.64 to each church. In Massachusetts, some Conference reports, both city and country, state expenses; reckoning the Boston Conferences by themselves, and all others on the ratio of the County Conferences reporting, gives a total of $1,480,000. If we reckon Massachusetts and Connecticut at the same ratio, and all other States by the average of the 848 reporting, but dropping a hundred churches as practically doing nothing, the "total" would be $5,486,000, — which is rather below than above the facts. TOTAL raised for expenses and charities would be not less than $6,900,000, not including cost of church building, legacies, or large endowments; an average per member of over twenty-two dollars. Of course, much of this is given by those not church members. Connecticut reports legacies (25 churches), $133,978.50.

MINISTERS.—The tables show an increase of 30 pastors, and 18 acting pastors; an increase of 27 churches supplied by pastors, and of 67 supplied by acting pastors, with 18 less vacant churches. But of the churches reckoned vacant, 153 are supplied by licentiates and men of other denominations, which is 24 more than last year; and leaves 614 actually unsupplied by a supply engaged for any permanent period, — which is 37 less than last year. The number of ministers not in pastoral work is 906, — 22 less than last year; more than due to dropping names not reported because the men are not connected with any ministerial or ecclesiastical organization. Of the 906, there is the usual proportion of persons engaged in colleges, theological schools and academies; editors, officials of the benevolent societies, and of charitable or State educational institutions, etc., — all of which are doing an essential Christian work. We think that one-third of the whole are thus employed; and many of them supply pulpits habitually, as also do many of them who are "in business." Not a few are aged or disabled men whose services can no longer be had. The net result is, — a lack of ministers, — and a lack of willingness on the part of many churches to employ what we have, with a living support.

LIST OF CONGREGATIONAL MINISTERS IN NORTH AMERICA.

WITH THEIR LATEST KNOWN POST-OFFICE ADDRESS.

EXPLANATIONS. — This list is made up from the names given in the Minutes of the several General Associations and Conferences, but additions and omissions have been made to meet pastoral changes since the issue of the Minutes. — Licentiates are not included; nor (internationally) ministers of any other denomination, though supplying a Congregational church. — In searching for names of various spellings, see each form. All contracted names, like "Mo," are arranged according to the contracted spelling. — This list sometimes differs from the tables, because corrected to the last moment before printing. — Names without P. O. address, are followed by the name of State (in parenthesis) which reports them. This list is sometimes inaccurate. Where a man is reported as living in three States at once, it requires uncommon discrimination to settle the difficulty. — For addresses of Foreign Missionaries, see directions on the cover of the Missionary Herald, monthly; letters being forwarded by the Missionary House, Boston.

The NATIONAL COUNCIL, at Oberlin, adopted the following:

"Resolved, That all ministers in our denomination ought to be in orderly connection with some ministerial or ecclesiastical organization which shall be able to certify to their regular standing in the ministry."

The following appears among the By-LAWS: —

"The Council approves of an annual compilation of the statistics of the churches, and of a list of such ministers as are reported by the several State organizations."

In conforming to this rule, the List of next year will be limited to Congregational ministers who are reported in Minutes as supplying churches, and ministers "without charge" who are reported by some organization with which they are connected.
